Vials of God's wrath, in Scripture, are the execution of his wrath upon the wicked for their sins. Rev. xvi.

VI'AL, v. t. To put in a vial. Milton.

VI'AL-ED, pp. Put in a vial.

VI'AL-ING, ppr. Inclosing in a vial.

VI'AND, n. [Fr. viande; from It. vivanda; L. vivendus, vivo, to live.]

Meat dressed; food.

Viands of various kinds allure the taste. Pope.

[It is used chiefly in the plural.]

VI'A-RY, a. Happening in roads.

VI-AT'IC, a. [L. viaticum, from via, way.]

Pertaining to a journey or to traveling.

VI-AT'I-CUM, n. [L. supra.] Provisions for a journey.

2. Among the ancient Romans, an allowance to officers who were sent into the provinces to exercise any office or perform any service, also to the officers and soldiers of the army. Cyc.

3. In the Roman Catholic church, the communion or eucharist given to persons in their last moments.

VI'BRĀTE, v. i. [L. vibro; It. vibrare. This word belongs to the root of Eng. wabble; W. gwibiaw, to wander, to move in a circular or serpentine direction.]

1. To swing; to oscillate; to move one way and the other; to play to and fro; as, the pendulum of a clock vibrates more or less rapidly, as it is shorter or longer; the chords of an instrument vibrate when touched.

2. To quiver; as, a whisper vibrates on the ear. Pope.

3. To pass from one state to another; as, a man vibrates from one opinion to another.

VI'BRĀTE, v. t. To brandish; to move to and fro; to swing; as, to vibrate a sword or staff. The pendulum of a clock vibrates seconds.

2. To cause to quiver.

Breath vocalized, that is, vibrated or undulated, may differently affect the lips, and impress a swift, tremulous motion. Holder.

VI'BRĀ-TED, pp. Brandished; moved one way and the other.

VI'BRA-TILE, (-til,) a. Adapted to or used in vibratory motion; as, the vibratile organs of certain insects. Say.

VI-BRA-TIL'I-TY, n. Disposition to preternatural vibration or motion. [Not much used.] Rush.

VI'BRĀ-TING, ppr. Brandishing; moving to and fro, as a pendulum or musical chord

VI-BRĀ'TION, n. [Fr., from L. vibro.]

1. The act of brandishing; the act of moving or state of being moved one way and the other in quick succession.

2. In mechanics, a regular, reciprocal motion of a body suspended; a motion consisting of continual reciprocations or returns; as of the pendulum of a time-keeper. This is frequently called OSCILLATION. The number of vibrations in a given time depends on the length of the vibrating body; a pendulum three feet long makes only ten vibrations, while one of nine inches makes twenty. The vibrations of a pendulum are somewhat slower at or near the equator than in remote latitudes. The vibrations of a pendulum are isochronal, whether performed in larger or smaller arcs. Hutton.

3. In physics, alternate or reciprocal motion; as, the vibrations of the nervous fluid, by which sensation has been supposed to be produced, by impressions of external objects propagated thus to the brain. Cyc.

4. In music, the motion of a chord, or the undulation of any body, by which sound is produced. The acuteness, elevation, and gravity of sound, depend on the length of the chord and its tension.

VI-BRĀ'TI-UN-CLE, (-unk-l,) n. A small vibration. Chambers. Cyc.

VI'BRA-TIVE, a. That vibrates. Newton.

VI'BRA-TO-RY, a. Vibrating; consisting in vibration or oscillation; as, a vibratory motion.

2. Causing to vibrate.

VIC'AR, n. [Fr. vicaire; It. vicario; L. vicarius, from vicis, a turn, or its root.]

1. In a general sense, a person deputed or authorized to perform the functions of another; a substitute in office. The pope claims to be vicar of Jesus Christ on earth. He has under him a grand vicar, who is a cardinal, and whose jurisdiction extends over all priests, regular and secular.

2. In the canon law, the priest of a parish, the predial tithes of which are impropriated or appropriated, that is, belong to a chapter or religious house, or to a layman, who receives them, and only allows the vicar the smaller tithes or a salary. Cyc.

Apostolic vicar, in the Roman Catholic church, is an officer of high standing, who has received power from the pope to decide in certain cases without instructions. Encyc. Am.

VIC'AR-AGE, n. The benefice of a vicar. A vicarage, by endowment, becomes a benefice distinct from the parsonage. Cyc.

VIC'AR-GEN'ER-AL, n. A title given by Henry VIII. to the earl of Essex, with power to oversee all the clergy, and regulate all church affairs. It is now the title of an office, which, as well as that of official principal, is united in the chancellor of the diocese. The business of the vicar-general is to exercise jurisdiction over matters purely spiritual. Cyc.

VI-CĀ'RI-AL, a. [from vicar.] Pertaining to a vicar; small; as, vicarial tithes.

VI-CĀ'RI-ATE, a. Having delegated power, as vicar. Barrow.

VI-CĀ'RI-ATE, n. A delegated office or power.

VI-CĀ'RI-OUS, a. [L. vicarius.] [Lord North.

1. Deputed; delegated; as, vicarious power or authority.

2. Acting for another; filling the place of another; as, a vicarious agent or officer.

3. Substituted in the place of another; as, a vicarious sacrifice. The doctrine of vicarious punishment has occasioned much controversy.

VI-CĀ'RI-OUS-LY, adv. In the place of another; by substitution. Burke.

VIC'AR-SHIP, n. The office of a vicar; the ministry of a vicar.

VICE, n.† [Fr. vice; It. vizio; Sp. vicio; L. vitium; W. gwyd.]

1. Properly, a spot or defect; a fault; a blemish; as, the vices of a political constitution. Madison.

2. In ethics, any voluntary action or course of conduct which deviates from the rules of moral rectitude, or from the plain rules of propriety; any moral unfitness of conduct, either from defect of duty or from the transgression of known principles of rectitude. Vice differs from crime in being less enormous. We never call murder or robbery a vice; but every act of intemperance, all falsehood, duplicity, deception, lewdness, and the like, is a vice. The excessive indulgence of passions and appetites, which in themselves are innocent, is a vice. The smoking of tobacco and the taking of snuff may, in certain cases, be innocent, and even useful; but these practices may be carried to such an excess as to become vices. This word is also used to denote a habit of transgressing; as, a life of vice. Vice is rarely a solitary invader; it usually brings with it a frightful train of followers.

3. Depravity or corruption of manners; as, an age of vice

When vice prevails, and impious men bear sway,
The post of honor is a private station. Addison.

4. A fault or bad trick in a horse.

5. In the old English drama, (the mysteries, &c.,) a buffoon wearing a cap with ass's ears, whose office was to torment and belabor another buffoon who represented the devil. P. Cyc.

6. An iron press with a screw, for holding articles fast when filed, &c. [This would more properly be written VISE, like the French vis, a screw.]

7. A gripe or grasp. [Obs.] Shak.

VICE, v. t. To press or screw up to a thing by a kind of violence. [Not in use.] [See VISE.] Shak.

VICE [L. vice, in the turn or place] is used in composition to denote one qui vicem gerit, who acts in the place of another, or is second in authority.

VICE-AD'MI-RAL, n. In the navy, the second officer in command. His flag is displayed at the fore topgallant mast head. Mar. Dict.

2. A civil officer, in Great Britain, appointed by the lords commissioners of the admiralty for exercising admiralty jurisdiction within their respective districts.

VICE-AD'MI-RAL-TY, n. The office of a vice-admiral; a vice-admiralty court.

VICE-Ā'GENT, n. [vice and agent.] One who acts in the place of another. Hooker.

VICE-CHAM'BER-LAIN, (-lin,) n. An officer in court next in command to the lord-chamberlain. England.

VICE-CHAN'CEL-LOR, n. An officer in a university, in England, a distinguished member, who is annually elected to manage the affairs in the absence of the chancellor. Cyc.

VICE-CON'SUL, n. One who acts in the place of a consul.

VI'CED, (vīst,) a. Vicious; corrupt. [Not in use.] Shak.

VICE-DŌGE', n. A counselor at Venice who represents the doge when sick or absent. Cyc.

VICE-GĒ'REN-CY, n. [See VICEGERENT.] The office of a vicegerent; agency under another; deputed power; lieutenancy. South.

VICE-GĒ'RENT, n. [L. vicem gerens, acting in the place of another.]

A lieutenant; a vicar; an officer who is deputed by a superior or by proper authority to exercise the powers of another. Kings are sometimes called God's vicegerents. It is to be wished they would always deserve the appellation.

VICE-GĒ'RENT, a. Having or exercising delegated power; acting by substitution, or in the place of another. Milton.

VICE-LEG'ATE, n. An officer employed by the pope to perform the office of spiritual and temporal governor in certain cities, when there is no legate or cardinal to command there. Cyc.

VIC'E-NA-RY, a. [L. vicenarius.]

Belonging to twenty.

VICE-PRES'I-DEN-CY, n. The office of vice-president. Story.

VICE-PRES'I-DENT, n. An officer next in rank below a president. United States.

VICE-RĒ'GAL, a. Pertaining to a viceroy or vice-royalty.

VICE'ROY, n. [Fr. viceroi.]

The governor of a kingdom or country who rules in the name of the king with regal authority, as the king's substitute. Swift.

VICE-ROY'AL-TY, n. The dignity, office, or jurisdiction of a viceroy.

VICE'ROY-SHIP, n. The dignity, office, or jurisdiction of a viceroy.

VICE-SUP-PRESS'ING, a. Adapted to suppress vice.

VI'CE-TY, n. Nicety; exactness. B. Jonson.

[Not in use; probably a mistake.]

VI'CE VER'SĀ, [L.] The terms or the case being reversed.

VI''CIATE, (vish'āte,) v. t. [L. vitio. This verb is usually written VITIATE; but as vice, from L. vitium, is established, it would be well to write the verb VICIATE, as we write APPRECIATE and DEPRECIATE, from L. pretium.]

1. To injure the substance or properties of a thing so as to impair its value, and lessen or destroy its use; to make less pure, or wholly impure; to deprave, in a physical or moral sense; as, to viciate the blood; to viciate taste or style; to viciate morals.

2. To render defective, and thus destroy the validity of; to invalidate by defect; as, to viciate a deed or bond.

VI''CIA-TED, (vish'ā-ted,) pp. or a. Depraved; impaired in substance or quality; rendered defective and void.

VI''CIA-TING, ppr. Injuring in substance or properties; rendering defective; making void.

VI''CI-Ā'TION, n. Depravation; corruption.

VIC'IN-AGE, n. [from L. vicinia, neighborhood; vicinus, near.]

Neighborhood; the place or places adjoining or near. A jury must be of the vicinage, or body of the county.

In law, common because of vicinage is where the inhabitants of two townships contiguous to each other have usually intercommuned with one another; the beasts of one straying into the other's fields without molestation from either. Blackstone.

VIC'I-NAL, } a. Near; neighboring. [Little used.] VIC'INE. } Glanville.

VI-CIN'I-TY, n.† [L. vicinitas.]

1. Nearness in place; as, the vicinity of two country seats.

2. Neighborhood; as, a seat in the vicinity of the metropolis.

3. Neighboring country. Vegetables produced in the vicinity of the city are daily brought to market. The vicinity is full of gardens.

VI''CI-OS'I-TY, n. Depravity; corruption of manners.

[But VICIOUSNESS is generally used.]

VI''CIOUS, (vish'us,) a. [Fr. vicieux; L. vitiosus.]

1. Defective; imperfect; as, a system of government vicious and unsound. Harte.

2. Addicted to vice; corrupt in principles or conduct; depraved; wicked; habitually transgressing the moral law; as, a vicious race of men; vicious parents; vicious children.

3. Corrupt; contrary to moral principles or to rectitude; as, vicious examples; vicious conduct.

4. Corrupt, in a physical sense; foul; impure; insalubrious; as, vicious air.

5. Corrupt; not genuine or pure; as, vicious language; vicious idioms.

6. Unruly; refractory; not well tamed or broken; as, a vicious horse. Smart.

VI''CIOUS-LY, adv. Corruptly; in a manner contrary to rectitude, moral principles, propriety, or purity.

2. Faultily; not correctly. Burnet.

VI''CIOUS-NESS, n. Addictedness to vice; corruptness of moral principles or practice; habitual violation of the moral law, or of moral duties; depravity in principles or in manners.

What makes a governor justly despised, is viciousness and ill morals. South.

2. Unruliness; refractoriness; as of a beast New England.

VI-CIS'SI-TUDE, n. [L. vicissitudo; from vicis, a turn.]

1. Regular change or succession of one thing to another; as, the vicissitudes of day and night, and of winter and summer; the vicissitudes of the seasons.

2. Change; revolution; as in human affairs. We are exposed to continual vicissitudes of fortune.

VI-CIS-SI-TŪ'DI-NA-RY, a. Changing in succession. Donne.

VI-CON'TI-EL, a. [L. vice-comitalia. See VISCOUNT.] In old law books, pertaining to the sheriff.

Vicontiel rents, are certain rents for which the sheriff pays a rent to the king.

Vicontiel writs, are such as are triable in the county or sheriff court. Cyc.

VI-CON'TI-ELS, n. pl. Things belonging to the sheriff; particularly, farms for which the sheriff pays rent to the king. Cyc.

VI'COUNT, n. [L. vice-comes.]

1. In law books, the sheriff.

2. A degree of nobility next below a count or earl. [See VISCOUNT.] Cyc.

VIC'TIM, n. [L. victima; Fr. victime.]

1. A living being sacrificed to some deity, or in the performance of a religious rite; usually, some beast slain in sacrifice; but human beings have been slain by some nations, for the purpose of appeasing the wrath or conciliating the favor of some deity.

2. A person or thing destroyed; a person or thing sacrificed in the pursuit of an object. How many persons have fallen victims to jealousy, to lust, to ambition!

VIC'TIM-ĀTE, v. t. To sacrifice [Not in use.] Bullokar.

VIC'TIM-IZE, v. t. To make a victim of; to sacrifice or destroy. [A cant, but common word.]

VIC'TOR, n. [L., from vinco, victus, to conquer, or the same root. N not being radical, the root is vico or vigo; Sax. wig, wigg, war; wiga, a warrior, a hero, a victor; wigan, to war, to fight. The primary sense is, to urge, drive, or strive; hence, to subdue.]

1. One who conquers in war; a vanquisher; one who defeats an enemy in battle. Victor differs from conqueror. We apply conqueror to one who subdues countries, kingdoms, or nations; as, Alexander was the conqueror of Asia or India, or of many nations, or of the world. In such phrases, we can not substitute victor. But we use victor when we speak of one who overcomes a particular enemy, or in a particular battle; as, Cesar was victor at Pharsalia. The duke of Wellington was victor at Waterloo. Victor, then, is not followed by the possessive case; for we do not say, Alexander was the victor of Darius, though we say, he was victor at Arbela. Johnson.

2. One who vanquishes another in private combat or contest; as, a victor in the Olympic games.

3. One who wins or gains the advantage.

In love, the victors from the vanquished fly;
They fly that wound, and they pursue that die. Waller.

4. Master, lord.

[Not usual, nor legitimate.]

VIC'TOR-ESS, n. A female who vanquishes. Spenser.

VIC-TŌ'RI-OUS, a. [Fr. victorieux.]

1. Having conquered in battle or contest; having overcome an enemy or antagonist; conquering; vanquishing; as, a victorious general; victorious troops; a victorious admiral or navy

2. That produces conquest; as, a victorious day. Pope.

3. Emblematic of conquest; indicating victory; as, brows bound with victorious wreaths. Shak.

VIC-TŌ'RI-OUS-LY, adv. With conquest; with defeat of an enemy or antagonist; triumphantly; as, grace will carry us victoriously through all difficulties. Hammond.

VIC-TŌ'RI-OUS-NESS, n. The state of being victorious.

VIC'TO-RY, n. [L. victoria, from vinco, victus, to conquer; Fr. victoire.]

1. Conquest; the defeat of an enemy in battle, or of an antagonist in contest; a gaining of the superiority in war or combat. Victory supposes the power of an enemy or antagonist to prove inferior to that of the victor. Victory, however, depends not always on superior skill or valor; it is often gained by the fault or mistake of the vanquished.

Victory may be honorable to the arms, but shameful to the counsels of a nation. Bolingbroke.

2. The advantage or superiority gained over spiritual enemies, over passions and appetites, or over temptations, or in any struggle or competition.

VIC'TRESS, n. A female that conquers. Shak.

VICT'UAL. See VICTUALS

VICT'UAL, (vit'l,) v. t. [from victual, the noun.]

1. To supply with provisions for subsistence; as, to victual an army; to victual a garrison.

2. To store with provisions; as, to victual a ship.

VICT'UAL-ED, (vit'ld,) pp. Supplied with provisions.

VICT'UAL-ER, (vit'ler,) n. One who furnishes provisions.

2. One who keeps a house of entertainment.

3. A provision-ship; a ship employed to carry provisions for other ships, or for supplying troops at a distance.

VICT'UAL-ING, (vit'ling,) ppr. Supplying with provisions.

VICT'UAL-ING-HOUSE, n. A house where provision is made for strangers to eat.

VICT'UALS, (vit'tlz,) n. pl. [Fr. victuailles; It. vettovaglia; Sp. vitualla; from L. victus, food, from the root of vivo, which was vigo or vico, coinciding with vigeo; Basque, vicia, life. This word is now never used in the singular.]

Food for human beings, prepared for eating; that which supports human life; provisions; meat; sustenance. We never apply this word to that on which beasts or birds feed, and we apply it chiefly to food for men when cooked or prepared for the table. We do not now give this name to flesh, corn, or flour in a crude state; but we say, the victuals are well cooked or dressed, and in great abundance. We say, a man eats his victuals with a good relish.

Such phrases as, to buy victuals for the army or navy, to lay in victuals for the winter, &c., are now obsolete. We say, to buy provisions: yet we use the verb, to victual an army or ship.

VI-DAME', n. In French feudal jurisprudence, a name given to a class of officers who represented the bishops, and who subsequently erected their offices into fiefs, and became feudal nobles. Brande.

VĪ'DE, [L.] See.

VIE, v. i. [Sax. wigan, to war, to contend, that is, to strain, to urge, to press. See VICTOR.]

To strive for superiority; to contend; to use effort in a race, contest, competition, rivalship, or strife. How delightful it is to see children vie with each other in diligence and in duties of obedience!

In a trading nation, the younger sons may be placed in a way of life to vie with the best of their family. Addison.

VIE, v. t. To show or practice in competition; as, to vie power; to vie charities. [Not legitimate.]

2. To urge; to press.

She hung about my neck, and kiss and kiss
She vied so fast. [Not in use.] Shak.

VI-ELLE', (ve-yel',) n. [Fr.] A stringed instrument played upon with a wheel; a hurdy-gurdy. Buchanan.

VI ET ĀR'MIS, [L.] In law, with force and arms; words expressive of a trespass. Bouvier.

VIEW, (vu,) v. t. [Fr. vue, from voir, to see, contracted from L. videre, Russ. viju, Sans. vid. The primary sense is, to reach or extend to.]

1. To survey; to examine with the eye; to look on with attention, or for the purpose of examining; to inspect; to explore. View differs from look, see, and behold, in expressing more particular or continued attention to the thing which is the object of sight. We ascended Mount Holyoke, and viewed the charming landscape below. We viewed with delight the rich valleys of the Connecticut about the town of Northampton.

Go up and view the country. — Josh. vii.
I viewed the walls of Jerusalem. — Neh. vii.

2. To see; to perceive by the eye. Pope.

3. To survey intellectually; to examine with the mental eye; to consider. View the subject in all its aspects.

VIEW, (vu,) n. Prospect; sight; reach of the eye.

The walls of Pluto's palace are in view. Dryden.

2. The whole extent seen. Vast or extensive views present themselves to the eye.

3. Sight; power of seeing, or limit of sight. The mountain was not within our view.

4. Intellectual or mental sight. These things give us a just view of the designs of Providence.

5. Act of seeing. The facts mentioned were verified by actual view.

6. Sight; eye

Objects near our view are thought greater than those of larger size, that are more remote. Locke.

7. Survey; inspection; examination by the eye. The assessors took a view of the premises.

Surveying nature with too nice a view. Dryden.

8. Intellectual survey; mental examination. On a just view of all the arguments in the case, the law appears to be clear.

9. Appearance; show

Graces —

VIEW'ER, (vū'er,) n. One who views, surveys, or examines.

2. In New England, a town officer whose duty is to inspect something; as, a viewer of fences, who inspects them to determine whether they are sufficient in law.

VIEW'ING, (vū'ing,) ppr. Surveying; examining by the eye or by the mind; inspecting; exploring.

VIEW'ING, (vū'ing,) n. The act of beholding or surveying.

VIEW'LESS, (vū'less,) a. That can not be seen; not being perceivable by the eye, invisible; as, viewless winds. Shak.

Swift through the valves the visionary fair
Repassed, and viewless mixed with common air. Pope.

VIEW'LY, (vū'le,) a. Striking to the view.

VI-GES-I-MĀ'TION, n. [L. vigesimus, twentieth.]

The act of putting to death every twentieth man Bailey.

VIG'IL, (vij'il,) n. [L. vigilia; Fr. vigile; L. vigil, waking, watchful; vigilo, to watch. This is formed on the root of Eng. wake, Sax. wæcan, wecan. The primary sense is, to stir, or excite, to rouse, to agitate.]

1. Watch; devotion performed in the customary hours of rest or sleep.

So they in heaven their odes and vigils tuned. Milton.

2. In church affairs, the eve or evening before any feast, the ecclesiastical day beginning at six o'clock in the evening, and continuing till the same hour the following evening; hence, a religious service performed in the evening preceding a holiday. Cyc.

3. A fast observed on the day preceding a holiday; a wake. Cyc.

4. Watch; forbearance of sleep; as, the vigils of the card-table. Addison.

Vigils or watchings of flowers; a term used by Linnæus to express a peculiar faculty belonging to the flowers of certain plants, of opening and closing their petals at certain hours of the day Cyc.

VIG'I-LANCE, n. [Fr., from L. vigilans See VIGIL.]

1. Forbearance of sleep; a state of being awake. Parr

2. Watchfulness; circumspection; attention of the mind in discovering and guarding against danger, or providing for safety. Vigilance is a virtue of prime importance in a general. The vigilance of the dog is no less remarkable than his fidelity.

3. Guard; watch.

In at this gate none pass

VIG'I-LAN-CY, for VIGILANCE, is not used.

VIG'I-LANT, a. [Fr., from L. vigilans.]
Watchful; circumspect; attentive to discover and avoid danger, or to provide for safety.

Take your places and be vigilant. Shak.
Be sober, be vigilant. — 1 Pet. v.

VIG'I-LANT-LY, adv. [Supra.] Watchfully; with attention to danger and the means of safety; circumspectly.

VI-GIN-TIV'I-RATE, n. [L. viginti and viri.]
A body of officers of government, consisting of twenty men. Murphy.

VIG-NETTE', (commonly pronounced vin'yet,) n. [Fr. vignette, from vigne, a vine.]
A name given to small engraved embellishments with which books, bank notes, &c., are ornamented. Such embellishments were originally painted on the margins of manuscripts, usually in the form of small vines, (vignettes,) whence the name. Properly, therefore, a vignette is a design which is not surrounded, like ordinary pictures, with a border.
Lunier. Landseer on Engraving.

VIG'OR, n. [L., from vigeo, to be brisk, to grow, to be strong; allied to vivo, vixi, to live, and to Sax. wigan, to carry on war, and to wake.]
1. Active strength or force of body in animals; physical force.

The vigor of this arm was never vain. Dryden.

2. Strength of mind; intellectual force; energy. We say, a man possesses vigor of mind or intellect.
3. Strength or force in animal or vegetable motion; as, a plant grows with vigor.
4. Strength; energy; efficacy.

In the fruitful earth
His beams, unactive else, their vigor find. Milton.

VIG'OR, v. t. To invigorate. [Not in use.] Feltham.

Virtual velocity; in mechanics, the velocity which a body in equilibrium would actually acquire during the first instant of its motion in case of the equilibrium being disturbed. Brande.

VIR-TU-AL'I-TY, n. Efficacy. Brown.

VIR'TU-AL-LY, adv. In efficacy or effect only; by means of some virtue or influence, or the instrumentality of something else. Thus, the sun is virtually on earth by its light and heat. The citizens of an elective government are virtually present in the legislature by their representatives. A man may virtually agree to a proposition by silence or withholding objections. Addison. Cyc.

VIR'TU-ATE, v. t. To make efficacious. [Not in use.] Harvey.

VIR'TUE, (vurt'yu,) n. [Fr. vertu; It. virtu; Sp. vertud; L. virtus, from vireo, or its root. (See WORTH.) The radical sense is strength, from straining, stretching, extending. This is the primary sense of L. vir, a man. Class Br.]

1. Strength; that substance or quality of physical bodies, by which they act and produce effects on other bodies. In this literal and proper sense, we speak of the virtue or virtues of plants in medicine, and the virtues of drugs. In decoctions the virtues of plants are extracted. By long standing in the open air, the virtues are lost.

2. Bravery; valor. This was the predominant signification of virtus among the Romans.

Trust to thy single virtues. Shak.

[This sense is nearly or quite obsolete.]

3. Moral goodness; the practice of moral duties and the abstaining from vice, or a conformity of life and conversation to the moral law. In this sense, virtue may be, and in many instances must be, distinguished from religion. The practice of moral duties merely from motives of convenience, or from compulsion, or from regard to reputation, is virtue, as distinct from religion. The practice of moral duties from sincere love to God and his laws, is virtue and religion. In this sense it is true,

That virtue only makes our bliss below. Pope.
Virtue is nothing but voluntary obedience to truth. Dwight.

4. A particular moral excellence; as, the virtue of temperance, of chastity, of charity.

Remember all his virtues. Addison.

5. Acting power; something efficacious.

Jesus, knowing that virtue had gone out of him, turned. — Mark iii.

6. Secret agency; efficacy without visible or material action.

She moves the body which she doth possess;
Yet no part toucheth, but by virtue's touch. Davies.

7. Excellence; or that which constitutes value and merit.

Terence, who thought the sole grace and virtue of their fable the sticking in of sentences. B. Jonson.

8. One of the orders of the celestial hierarchy.

Thrones, dominations, princedoms, virtues, powers. Milton.

9. Efficacy; power.

He used to travel through Greece by virtue of this fable, which procured him reception in all the towns. Addison.

10. Legal efficacy or power; authority. A man administers the laws by virtue of a commission.

In virtue; in consequence; by the efficacy or authority.

This they shall attain, partly in virtue of the promise of God, and partly in virtue of piety. Atterbury.

VIR'TUE-LESS, (vurt'yu-,) a. Destitute of virtue.

To cry out with vehemence; to exclaim.

VO-CIF'ER-ĀTE, v. t. To utter with a loud voice.

VO-CIF'ER-Ā-TING, ppr. Crying out with vehemence; uttering with a loud voice.

VO-CIF-ER-Ā'TION, n. A violent outcry; vehement utterance of the voice. Arbuthnot.

VO-CIF'ER-OUS, a. Making a loud outcry; clamorous; noisy; as, vociferous heralds. Chapman.

VO-CIF'ER-OUS-LY, adv. With great noise in calling, shouting, &c.

VO-CIF'ER-OUS-NESS, n. Clamorousness.

VŌGUE, (vōg,) n. [Fr. vogue, a rowing; It. voga, a rowing, mode, fashion; vogare, to row; Sp. voga; vogar, to row. This word belongs to the family of Bg, Wg. (See WAG and WAY.) The sense of vogue is way, or the going of the world.]

The way or fashion of people at any particular time; temporary mode, custom, or practice; popular reception for the time. We say, a particular form of dress is now in vogue; an amusing writer is now in vogue; such opinions are now in vogue. The phrase, the vogue of the world, used by good writers formerly, is nearly or quite obsolete.

Use may revive the obsoletest word,
And banish those that now are most in vogue Roscommon.

VOICE, n. [Fr. voix; L. vox; It. voce; Sp. voz; Gaelic, bagh, a word; baigham, to speak to; Ir. focal, a word; Sans. vach, to speak, L. voco. The sense of the verb is, to throw, to drive out sound; and voice is that which is driven out.]

1. Sound or audible noise uttered by the mouth, either of human beings or of other animals. We say, the voice of a man is loud or clear; the voice of a woman is soft or musical; the voice of a dog is loud or harsh; the voice of a bird is sweet or melodious. The voice of human beings is articulate; that of beasts, inarticulate. The voices of men are different, and, when uttered together, are often dissonant.

2. Any sound made by the breath; as, the trumpet's voice.

3. A vote; suffrage; opinion or choice expressed. Originally voice was the oral utterance of choice, but it now signifies any vote, however given.

Some laws ordain, and some attend the choice
Of holy senates, and elect by voice. Dryden.
I have no words;
My voice is in my sword. Shak.

4. Language; words; expression.

Let us call on God in the voice of his church. Fell.

*3. In heraldry, represented as flying or having the wings spread.

VOL'A-TILE, a. [Fr., from L. volatilis, from volo, to fly.]

1. Flying; passing through the air on wings, or by the buoyant force of the atmosphere.

2. Having the power to fly; as, birds are volatile animals. Ray. Bacon.

3 Capable of wasting away, or of easily passing into the aëriform state. Thus substances which affect the smell with pungent or fragrant odors, as musk, hartshorn, and essential oils, are called volatile substances, because they waste away on exposure to the atmosphere. Alcohol and ether are called volatile liquids for a similar reason, and because they easily pass into the state of vapor on the application of heat. On the contrary, gold is a fixed substance, because it does not suffer waste, even when exposed to the heat of a furnace; and oils are called fixed when they do not evaporate on simple exposure to the atmosphere.

4. Lively; gay; full of spirit; airy; hence, fickle; apt to change; as, a volatile temper. Watts.

You are as giddy and volatile as ever. Swift.

Volatile alkali; an old name of ammonia.

VOL'A-TILE, n. A winged animal. [Little used.] Brown.

VOL'A-TILE-NESS, }
VOL-A-TIL'I-TY, } n.† [Fr. volatilité.]

1. Disposition to exhale or evaporate; the quality of being capable of evaporation; that property of a substance which disposes it to rise and float in the air, and thus to be dissipated; as, the volatility of fluids. Ether is remarkable for its volatility. Many or most solid bodies are susceptible of volatility by the action of intense heat.

By the spirit of a plant, we understand that pure, elaborated oil, which, by reason of its extreme volatility, exhales spontaneously, and in which the odor or smell consists. Arbuthnot.

2. Great sprightliness; levity; liveliness; whence, mutability of mind; fickleness; as, the volatility of youth.

VOL'A-TIL-IZ-A-BLE, a. That may be volatilized.

VOL-A-TIL-I-ZĀ'TION, n. [from volatilize.] The act or process of rendering volatile, or rather of causing to rise and float in the air. Boyle.

VOL'A-TIL-IZE, v. t. [Fr. volatiliser.]

To render volatile; to cause to exhale or evaporate; to cause to pass off in vapor or invisible effluvia, and to rise and float in the air.

The water — dissolving the oil, and volatilizing it by the action. Newton.

VOL'A-TIL-IZ-ED, pp. Rendered volatile; caused to rise and float in air.

VOL'A-TIL-IZ-ING, ppr. Rendering volatile; causing to rise and float in air.

VOL-CAN'IC, a. [from volcano.] Pertaining to volcanoes; as, volcanic heat.

2. Produced by a volcano; as, volcanic tufa.

3. Changed or affected by the heat of a volcano.

VOL-CAN-IC'I-TY, (-is'e-te,) n. State of bein gvolcanic; volcanic power. Humboldt.

VO-LI''TION, (-lish'un,) n.† [L. volitio, from volo, to will. See WILL.]

1. The act of willing; the act of determining choice, or forming a purpose. There is a great difference between actual volition and the approbation of judgment. South.

Volition is the actual exercise of the power which the mind has of considering or forbearing to consider an idea. Locke.

2. The power of willing or determining.

VOL'I-TIVE, a. Having the power to will.

They not only perfect the intellectual faculty, but the volitive. Hale.

VOL'LEY, n.; pl. VOLLEYS. [Fr. volée, a flight, from voler, to fly, L. volo.]

1. A flight of shot; the discharge of many small arms at once. Waller.

2. A burst or emission of many things at once; as, a volley of words. Shak.

But rattling nonsense in full volleys breaks. Pope.

VOL'LEY, v. t. To discharge with a volley.

VOL'LEY, v. i. To throw out or discharge at once. Shak.

VOL'LEY-ED, (vol'lid,) a. [from volley.] Disploded; discharged with a sudden burst; as, volleyed thunder. Milton. Philips.

VŌLT, n. [Fr. volte, a ring; It. volta, a turn; from L. volutus, volvo.]

1. A round or circular tread; a gait of two treads made by a horse going sideways round a center. Far. Dict.

2. In fencing, a sudden movement or leap to avoid a thrust.

VOL'TA, in Italian music, signifies that the part is to be repeated one, two, or more times.

VOL-TĀ'IC, a. Pertaining to Volta, the discoverer of voltaism; as, the voltaic pile.

Voltaic apparatus; the apparatus used for accumulating galvanic electricity. The agent itself is denominated galvanism, after its discoverer, Galvani, while the instruments used for exciting and accumulating it are called voltaic, in honor of Volta, who first contrived this kind of apparatus.

Voltaic pile; a column formed by successive pairs of metallic disks, as silver and zinc, with moistened cloth between every two contiguous pairs.

Voltaic electricity; the kind of electricity which is evolved by voltaic apparatus.

Voltaic battery; the larger forms of voltaic apparatus, used for accumulating galvanic electricity.

VOL'TA-ISM, n. [from Volta, an Italian.]

That branch of electrical science which has its source in the chemical action between metals and different liquids. It is more properly called GALVANISM, from Galvani, who first proved or brought into notice its remarkable influence on animals.

VOL-TAM'E-TER, n. [Volta and μετρον.]

An instrument for measuring the voltaic electricity passing through it.

VOLTI, [It.] In music, turn over.

VOL'TI-GEUR, (-zhur,) n. A light-horseman or dragoon. In the army of the United States, each dragoon or horseman has a foot-soldier attached to him, who, in case of necessity, mounts behind on the same horse; thus presenting, whenever they meet the enemy, a line of infantry and of dragoons in the same regiment. Crittenden.

VOLTI SUBITO, [It.] Turn over quickly.

VO-LŪ'BIL-ATE, } a. In gardening, a volubilate stem
VOL'Ū-BILE, } is one that climbs by winding or twining round another body. Cyc.

VOL-Ū-BIL'I-TY, n. [Fr. volubilité; L. volubilitas, from volvo, to roll.]

1. The capacity of being rolled; aptness to roll; as, the volubility of a bowl. Watts.

2. The act of rolling.

By irregular volubility. Hooker.

VOL'UME, (vol'yum,) n. [Fr., from L. volumen, a roll; volvo, to roll. To make u long, in this word, is palpably wrong.]

1. Primarily, a roll, as the ancients wrote on long strips of bark, parchment, or other material, which they formed into rolls or folds. Of such volumes, Ptolemy's library in Alexandria contained three or seven hundred thousand.

2. A roll or turn; as much as is included in a roll or coil; as, the volume of a serpent. Dryden.

3. Dimensions; compass; space occupied; as, the volume of an elephant's body; a volume of gas. Darwin. Parke.

4. A swelling or spherical body

The undulating billows rolling their silver volumes. Irving.

5. A book; a collection of sheets of paper, usually printed or written paper, folded and bound, or covered. A book consisting of sheets once folded is called a folio, or a folio volume; of sheets twice folded, a quarto; and thus, according to the number of leaves in a sheet, it is called an octavo or a duodecimo. The Scriptures, or sacred writings, bound in a single volume, are called the Bible. The number of volumes in the Royal Library, in Rue de Richelieu, at Paris, is variously estimated. According to the returns in 1836, there were more than 700,000 volumes.

An odd volume of a set of books bears not the value of its proportion to the set. Franklin.

VO-LŪ'MIN-OUS-NESS, n. State of being bulky or in many volumes.

VOL'Ụ-MIST, n. One who writes a volume; an author. [Not in use.] Milton.

VOL'UN-TA-RI-LY, adv. [from voluntary.] Spontaneously; of one's own will; without being moved, influenced, or impelled, by others.

To be agents voluntarily in our own destruction, is against God and nature. Hooker.

VOL'UN-TA-RI-NESS, n. The state of being voluntary or optional.

VOL'UN-TA-RY, a.† [Fr. volontaire; L. voluntarius, from voluntas, will, from volo. Voluntary is applicable only to beings that have will; spontaneous is applicable to physical causes, as well as to the will of an agent.]

1. Acting by choice or spontaneously; acting without being influenced or impelled by another.

2. Free, or having power to act by choice; not being under restraint; as, man is a voluntary agent. Hooker.

3. Proceeding from choice or free will.

That sin or guilt pertains exclusively to voluntary action, is the true principle of orthodoxy. N. W. Taylor.

4. Willing; acting with willingness.

She fell to lust a voluntary prey. Pope.

5. Done by design; purposed; intended. If a man kills another by lopping a tree, here is no voluntary murder.

6. Done freely, or of choice; proceeding from free will. He went into voluntary exile; he made a voluntary surrender.

7. Acting of his own accord; spontaneous; as, the voluntary dictates of knowledge.

8. Subject to the will; as, the voluntary motions of an animal. Thus the motion of a leg or an arm is voluntary, but the motion of the heart is involuntary.

A voluntary escape, in law, is the escape of a prisoner by the express consent of the sheriff.

Voluntary jurisdiction, is that which is exercised in doing that which no one opposes; as in granting dispensations, &c.

Voluntary affidavit or oath, is one made in an extrajudicial matter.

Voluntary waste, is that which is committed by positive acts.

VOL'UN-TA-RY, n. One who engages in any affair of his own free will; a volunteer. [In this sense, VOLUNTEER is now generally used.]

2. In music, a piece played by a musician, often extemporarily, according to his fancy. In the Philosophical Transactions, we have a method of writing voluntaries as fast as the musician plays the notes. This is by a cylinder turning under the keys of the organ. Cyc.

3. A composition for the organ.

VOL-UN-TEER', n. [Fr. volontaire.]

A person who enters into military or other service of his own free will. In military affairs, volunteers enter into service voluntarily, but when in service, they are subject to discipline and regulations like other soldiers. They sometimes serve gratuitously, but often receive a compensation.

VOL-UN-TEER', a. Entering into service of free will; as, volunteer companies.

VOL-UN-TEER', v. t. To offer or bestow voluntarily, or without solicitation or compulsion; as, to volunteer one's services.

VOL-UN-TEER', v. i. To enter into any service of one's free will, without solicitation or compulsion. He volunteered in that undertaking.

[These verbs are in respectable use.]

VO-LUP'TU-A-RY, (vo-lupt'yu-a-ry,) n. [L. voluptuarius, from voluptas, pleasure.]

A man addicted to luxury or the gratification of the appetite, and to other sensual pleasures. Atterbury.

VO-LUP'TU-OUS, (vo-lupt'yu-us,) a. [Fr. voluptueux; L. voluptuosus.]

Given to the enjoyments of luxury and pleasure; indulging to excess in sensual gratifications.

Softened with pleasure and voluptuous life. Milton.

VO-LUP'TU-OUS-LY, adv. Luxuriously; with free indulgence of sensual pleasures; as, to live voluptuously.

VO-LUP'TU-OUS-NESS, n. Luxuriousness; addictedness to pleasure or sensual gratification.

Where no voluptuousness, yet all delight. Donne.

VOL-Ụ-TĀ'TION, n. [L. volutatio, from voluto, from volvo, Eng. to wallow.]

A wallowing; a rolling of the body on the earth. [See WALLOW.]

VO-LŪTE', *n. [Fr. volute; It. voluta; from L. volutus, volvo.]

*1. In architecture, a kind of spiral scroll, used in the Ionic and Composite capitals, of which it is a principal ornament. The number of volutes in the Ionic order is four; in the Composite, eight. There are also eight angular volutes in the Corinthian capital, accompanied with eight smaller ones, called HELICES. Cyc.

2. In natural history, a name given to the mollusks of the genus Voluta. They have spiral, unilocular shells, with the pillar or columella plaited, and are prized for their beauty and rarity. P. Cyc.

VOM'I-CA, n. [L.] An abscess in the lungs.

VOM'IC-NUT, n. [L. vomica, emetic, and nux, a nut.]

The seed of the Strychnos nux vomica, a medium-sized tree growing in various parts of India; commonly called NUX VOMICA. The fruit is of the size of a small orange, and of the same color, covered with a tough rind, and filled with a pulp, in which the seeds are imbedded. Almost all parts of this tree are medicinal, but more especially the seeds. They are not emetic, however, as their name implies. The snake-wood does not belong to this tree, as some have asserted, but to Strychnos colubrina, another species of the same genus.

VOM'IT, v. i. [L. vomo; Fr. vomir; It. vomire; Sans. vamathu. Probably the Gr. εμεω is the same word, with the loss of its first letter.]

To eject the contents of the stomach by the mouth. Some animals vomit with ease, as cats and dogs; but horses do not vomit. Cyc.

VOM'IT, v. t. To throw up or eject from the stomach; to discharge from the stomach through the mouth. It is followed often by up or out, but without necessity, and to the injury of the language. In the yellow fever, the patients often vomit dark-colored matter, like coffee grounds.

The fish vomited out Jonah upon the dry land. — Jonah ii.

2. To eject with violence from any hollow place. Volcanoes vomit flames, ashes, stones, and liquid lava.

VOM'IT, n. The matter ejected from the stomach. Sandys.

2. That which excites the stomach to discharge its contents; an emetic.

Black vomit; a copious vomiting of dark-colored matter, resembling coffee grounds; one of the most fatal attendants of the yellow fever.

VOM'IT-ED, pp. Ejected from the stomach through the mouth, or from any deep place through an opening.

VOM'IT-ING, ppr. Discharging from the stomach through the mouth, or ejecting from any deep place.

VOM'IT-ING, n. The act of ejecting the contents of the stomach through the mouth. Vomiting is essentially an inverted action of the stomach and esophagus. Cyc.

2. The act of throwing out substances with violence from a deep hollow, as a volcano, &c.

VO-MI''TION, (vo-mish'un,) n. The act or power of vomiting. Grew.

VOM'I-TIVE, a. [Fr. vomitif.]

Causing the ejection of matter from the stomach; emetic. Brown.

VO-MI''TO, (vo-mē'to,) n. [Sp.] The yellow fever in its worst form, when it is usually attended with the black vomit.

VOM'I-TO-RY, a. [L. vomitorius.] Procuring vomiting; causing to eject from the stomach; emetic. Brown.

VOM'I-TO-RY, n. An emetic. Harvey.

2. A principal door or entrance of a large building, as of an amphitheater. Gibbon.

VO-RĀ'CIOUS, (-shus,) a. [Fr. and It. vorace; L. vorax, from voro, to devour; Heb. and Ch. בלע, to clear away, to consume; Gr. βορα, food. Class Br, No. 6.]

1. Greedy for eating; ravenous; very hungry; as, a voracious man or appetite.

2. Rapacious; eager to devour; as, voracious animals.

3. Ready to swallow up; as, a voracious gulf or whirlpool.

VO-RĀ'CIOUS-LY, adv. With greedy appetite; ravenously.

VO-RĀ'CIOUS-NESS, n. Greediness of appetite; ravenousness; eagerness to devour; rapaciousness.

VO-RAC'I-TY, (-ras'e-te,) n. Greediness of appetite; voraciousness.

Creatures, by their voracity pernicious, have commonly fewer young. Derham.

VOR'TEX, n.; pl. VORTICES or VORTEXES [L., from verto, ant. vorto, to turn.]

1. A whirlpool; a whirling or circular motion of water, forming a kind of cavity in the center of the circle, and in some instances drawing in water or absorbing other things.

2. A whirling of the air; a whirlwind. Cyc.

3. In the Cartesian system, a collection of particles of matter, forming an ether or fluid endowed with a rapid rotary motion around an axis. By means of these vortices, Descartes attempted to account for the formation of the universe. Brande.

VOR'TI-CAL, a. Whirling; turning; as, a vortical motion. Newton. Bentley.

VOR'TI-CEL, n. The name of certain wheel-animalcules, which, by the rapid rotary motion of the organs round the mouth, create a vortex in the water, and obtain their food. Kirby.

VŌ'TA-RESS, n. A female devoted to any service, worship, or state of life.

No rosary this votaress needs. Cleaveland.

VŌ'TA-RIST, n. [See VOTARY.] One devoted or given up to any person or thing, to any service, worship, or pursuit.

I am no idle votarist. Shak.

[VOTARY is now used.]

VŌ'TA-RY, a. [from L. votus, from voveo. See Vow.]

Devoted; promised; consecrated by a vow or promise; consequent on a vow.

Votary resolution is made equipollent to custom. Bacon.

VŌ'TA-RY, n. One devoted, consecrated, or engaged by a vow or promise; hence, more generally, one devoted, given, or addicted to some particular service, worship, study, or state of life. Every goddess of antiquity had her votaries. Every pursuit or study has now its votaries. One is a votary to mathematics, another is a votary to music, and alas! a great portion of the world are votaries of sensual pleasures.

It was the coldness of the votary, not the prayer, which was in fault. Fell.

VŌTE, n. [It. and Sp. voto; L. votum, from voveo, to vow. Votum is properly wish or will.]

1. Suffrage; the expression of a wish, desire, will, preference, or choice, in regard to any measure proposed, in which the person voting has an interest in common with others, either in electing a man to office, or in passing laws, rules, regulations, and the like. This vote or expression of will may be given by holding up the hand, by rising and standing up, by the voice, (viva voce,) by ballot, by a ticket, or otherwise. All these modes and others are used. Hence,

2. That by which will or preference is expressed in elections, or in deciding propositions; a ballot; a ticket, &c.; as, a written vote.

3. Expression of will by a majority; legal decision by some expression of the minds of a number; as, the vote was unanimous.

4. United voice in public prayer.

VŌTE, v. i. To express or signify the mind, will, or preference, either viva voce, or by ballot, &c., in electing men to office, or in passing laws, regulations, and the like, or in deciding on any proposition in which one has an interest with others. In elections, men are bound to vote for the best men to fill offices, according to their best knowledge and belief.

To vote for a duelist, is to assist in the prostration of justice, and indirectly to encourage the crime. L. Beecher.

VŌTE, v. t. To choose by suffrage; to elect by some expression of will; as, the citizens voted their candidate into office with little opposition.

2. To enact or establish by vote or some expression of will. The legislature voted the resolution unanimously.

3. To grant by vote or expression of will.

Parliament voted them a hundred thousand pounds. Swift.

VŌT'ED, pp. Expressed by vote or suffrage; determined.

VŌT'ER, n. One who has a legal right to vote or give his suffrage.

VŌT'ING, ppr. Expressing the mind, will, or preference in election, or in determining questions proposed; giving a vote or suffrage; electing, deciding, giving, or enacting by vote.

VŌT'ING, n. The act of expressing the mind, will, or preference by vote or suffrage.

VŌ'TIVE, a. [Fr. votif; L. votivus, from votus, vowed.]

Given by vow; devoted; as, votive offerings. A votive medal is one struck in grateful commemoration of some auspicious event; a votive offering is a tablet, picture, &c., dedicated in consequence of the vow of a worshiper.

Venus, take my votive glass. Prior.

VŌ'TIVE-LY, adv. By vow.

VOUCH, v. t. [Norm. voucher; L. voco. See VOICE.]

1. To call to witness; to obtest.

And vouch the silent stars and conscious moon. Dryden.

2. To declare; to affirm; to attest; to warrant; to maintain by affirmations.

They made him ashamed to vouch the truth of the relation, and afterward to credit it. Atterbury.

3. To warrant; to confirm; to establish proof.

The consistency of the discourse — vouches it to be worthy of the great apostle. Locke.

4. In law, to call into court to warrant and defend, or to make good a warranty of title.

He vouches the tenant in tail, who vouches over the common vouchee. Blackstone.

VOUCH, v. i. To bear witness; to give testimony or full attestation. I can not vouch for the truth of the report.

He declares he will not believe her, till the elector of Hanover shall vouch for the truth of what she has so solemnly affirmed. Swift.

VOUCH, n. Warrant; attestation. Shak.

VOUCH'ED, (voucht,) pp. Called to witness; affirmed or fully attested; called into court to make good a warranty.

VOUCH-EE', n. In law, the person who is vouched or called into court to support or make good his warranty of title in the process of common recovery. Blackstone.

VOUCH'ER, n. One who gives witness or full attestation to any thing.

3. A book, paper, or document which serves to vouch the truth of accounts, or to confirm and establish facts of any kind. The merchant's books are his vouchers for the correctness of his accounts. Notes, bonds, receipts, and other writings, are used as vouchers in proving facts.

VOUCH'ER, } n. In law, the tenant in a writ of right;
VOUCH'OR, } one who calls in another to establish his warranty of title. In common recoveries, there may be a single voucher, or double vouchers. Blackstone.

VOUCH'ING, ppr. Calling to witness; attesting by affirmation; calling in to maintain warranty of title.

VOUCH-SĀFE', v. t. [vouch and safe; to vouch or answer for safety.]

1. To permit to be done without danger.

2. To condescend to grant.

Shall I vouchsafe your worship a word or two? Shak.
It is not said by the apostle that God vouchsafed to the heathen the means of salvation. South.

VOUCH-SĀFE', v. i. To condescend; to deign; to yield.

Vouchsafe, illustrious Ormond, to behold
What power the charms of beauty had of old. Dryden.

VOUCH-SĀF'ED, (-sāft',) pp. Granted in condescension.

VOUCH-SĀFE'MENT, n. Grant in condescension; as, God's greatest communicated vouchsafements. Boyle.

VOUCH-SĀF'ING, ppr. Condescending to grant; deigning.

VOW, n. [Fr. vœu; It. voto; L. votum, from voveo, to vow; probably a contracted word.]

1. A solemn promise made to God, or by a pagan to his deity. The Roman generals, when they went to war, sometimes made a vow that they would build a temple to some favorite deity, if he would give them victory. A vow is a promise of something to be given or done hereafter.

A person is constituted a religious by taking three vows, of chastity, of poverty, and of obedience. Among the Israelites, the vows of children were not binding, unless ratified by the express or tacit consent of their father. Num. xxx.

2. A solemn promise; as, the vows of unchangeable love and fidelity. In a moral and religious sense, vows are promises to God, as they appeal to God to witness their sincerity, and the violation of them is a most heinous offense.

VOW, v. t. [Fr. vouer; L. voveo.]

1. To give, consecrate, or dedicate to God by a solemn promise. When Jacob went to Mesopotamia, he vowed to God a tenth of his substance, and his own future devotion to his service. Gen. xxviii.

When thou vowest a vow, defer not to pay it. — Eccles. v.

2. To devote. Spenser.

VOW, v. i. To make vows or solemn promises. He that vows, must be careful to perform.

VOW'ED, pp. Solemnly promised to God; given or consecrated by solemn promise.

VOW'EL, n. [L. vocalis, from voco; Fr. voyelle; It. vocale.]

1. In grammar, a simple sound; a sound uttered by simply opening the mouth or organs; as the sound of a, e, o.

2. The letter or character which represents a simple sound.

VOW'EL, a. Pertaining to a vowel; vocal.

VOW'EL-ED, a. Furnished with vowels.

VOW'ER, n. One who makes a vow.

VOW'ING, ppr. Making a vow.

VOY'AGE, n. [Fr., from voie, or the same root, Eng. way, Sax. wæg, weg. See WAG and WAY.]

1. A passing by sea or water from one place, port, or country to another, especially a passing or journey by water to a distant place or country. Captain L. made more than a hundred voyages to the West Indies. A voyage over Lake Superior is like a voyage to Bermuda.

2. The practice of traveling. [Not in use.] Bacon.

VOY'AGE, v. i. To sail or pass by water. Pope.

VOY'AGE, v. t. To travel; to pass over.

I with pain
Voyaged th' unreal, vast, unbounded deep. Milton.

VOY'A-GER, n. One who sails or passes by sea or water.

A private voyager I pass the main. Pope.

VOY'Ä-GEUR', (vwä'yä-zhur',) n. [Fr.] Literally, a traveler; the Canadian name of a class of men employed by the fur companies, &c., in transporting goods by the rivers and across the land, to and from the remote stations at the north-west.

VOY'OL, n. Among seamen, a large rope, sometimes used in weighing the anchor; also written VIOL.

Vox populi; the voice of the people.

Vox Dei; the voice of God.

VUL'CAN, n. [L. vulcanus.] In mythology, the god who presided over the working of metals. The husband of Venus.

VUL-CĀ'NI-AN, a. Pertaining to Vulcan, or to works in iron, &c. Smart.

As an epithet, in geology, the same as PLUTONIAN, which see. Smart.

VUL'CAN-IST. See VOLCANIST.

VUL-CĀ'NO. See VOLCANO.

VUL'GAR, a. [Fr. vulgaire; It. vulgare; L. vulgaris, from vulgus, the common people, that is, the crowd, Eng. folk.]

1. Pertaining to the common, unlettered people; as, vulgar life.

2. Used or practiced by common people; as, vulgar

3. Vernacular; national. [sports.

It might be more useful to the English reader to write in our vulgar language. Fell.

4. Common; used by all classes of people; as, the vulgar version of the Scriptures.

5. Public; as, vulgar report.

6. Mean; rustic; rude; low; unrefined; as, vulgar minds; vulgar manners.

7. Consisting of common persons.

In reading an account of a battle, we follow the hero with our whole attention, but seldom reflect on the vulgar heaps of slaughter. Rambler.

Vulgar fractions; in arithmetic, fractions expressed by a numerator and denominator; thus, $\frac{2}{5}$.

VUL'GAR, n. The common people.

[It has no plural termination, but has often a plural verb.]

The vulgar imagine the Pretender to have been a child imposed on the nation. Swift.

VUL'GAR-ISM, n. Grossness of manners; vulgarity. [Little used.]

2. A vulgar phrase or expression.

[This is the usual sense of the word.]

VUL-GAR'I-TY, } n. Mean condition of life; the VUL'GAR-NESS, } state of the lower classes of society. Brown.

2. Grossness or clownishness of manners or language; as, vulgarity of behavior; vulgarity of expression or language. Dryden.

VUL'GAR-IZE, v. t. To make vulgar. Foster.

VUL'GAR-IZ-ED, pp. Made vulgar.

VUL'GAR-IZ-ING, ppr. Rendering vulgar.

VUL'GAR-LY, adv. Commonly; in the ordinary manner among the common people.

Such one we vulgarly call a desperate person. Hammond.

2. Meanly; rudely; clownishly.

VUL'GATE, n. A very ancient Latin version of the Scriptures, and the only one which the Roman Catholic church admits to be authentic. It is so called from its common use in the Latin church. Cyc.

VUL'GATE, a. Pertaining to the old Latin version of the Scriptures.

VUL-NER-A-BIL'I-TY, n. The state of being vulnerable.

VUL'NER-A-BLE, a. [Fr., from L. vulnero, to wound, from vulnus, a wound.]

1. That may be wounded; susceptible of wounds or external injuries; as, a vulnerable body

Achilles was vulnerable in his heel; and there will never be wanting a Paris to infix the dart. Dwight.

2. Liable to injury; subject to be affected injuriously; as, a vulnerable reputation.

To wound; to hurt. [Not in use.] Glanville.

VUL-NER-Ā'TION, n. The act of wounding. [Not in use.] Pearson.

VUL'PINE, (vul'pin,) a. [L. vulpinus, from vulpes, a fox. Vulpes is our English wolf, the same word applied to a different animal.]

Pertaining to the fox; cunning; crafty; artful.

VUL'TURE, (vult'yur,) *n. [L. vultur.]

An accipitrine bird of the genus Vultur. Vultures have a large and strong beak, the nostrils pierced transversely to its base; the head and neck without feathers or caruncles, and a collar of long feathers, or of down, at the root of the neck. Proper vultures have hitherto been found only on the eastern continent. Cuvier.

VUL'TUR-INE, (vult'yur-in,) a. [L. vulturinus.]

Belonging to the vulture; having the qualities of the vulture; resembling the vulture; rapacious.

VUL'TUR-ISH, a. Like a vulture.

VUL'TUR-OUS, a. Like a vulture; rapacious.

VY'ING, ppr. Competing; emulating.

W.

WIS the twenty-third letter of the English alphabet. It takes its written form and its name from the union of two *V*s, this being the form of the Roman capital letter which we call U. The name, double u, being given to it from its form or composition, and not from its sound, ought not to be retained. Every letter should be named from its sound, especially the vowels. W is properly a vowel, a simple sound, formed by opening the mouth with a close, circular configuration of the lips. It is precisely the ou of the French, and the u of the Spaniards, Italians, and Germans. With the other vowels it forms diphthongs, which are of easy pronunciation; as in well, want, will, dwell; pronounced ooel, ooant, ooill, dooell. In English, it is always followed by another vowel, except when followed by h or r, as in when, wreck; but this case is an exception only in writing, and not in pronunciation, for h precedes w in utterance; when being pronounced hooen. In Welsh, w, which is sounded as in English, is used without another vowel, as in fwl, a fool; dwn, dun; dwb, mortar; gwn, a gun and a gown.

It is not improbable that the Romans pronounced v as we do w, for their volvo is our wallow; and volo, velle, is the English will, G. wollen. But this is uncertain. The German v has the sound of the English f, and w that of the English v.

W, at the end of words, is often silent after a and o, as in law, saw, low, sow. In many words of this kind, w represents the Saxon g; in other cases, it helps to form a diphthong, as in now, vow, new, strew.

As an abbreviation, W. stands for west; W. N. W. for west-north-west; W. S. W. for west-south-west, &c.

WAB'BLE, (wob'bl,) v. i. [W. gwibiaw, to wander, to move in a circular form.]

To move from one side to the other; to vacillate; as a turning or whirling body. So it is said a top wabbles, when it is in motion, and deviates from a perpendicular direction; a spindle wabbles, when it moves one way and the other. A millstone in motion, if not well balanced, will wabble.

[This word is applied chiefly to bodies when turning with a circular motion, and its place can not be supplied by any other word in the language. It is neither low nor barbarous.]

WAB'BLE, n. A hobbling, unequal motion.

WAB'BLING, ppr. or a. Having an irregular motion, backward and forward.

WACK'E, } n. A rock nearly allied to basalt, of which WACK'Y, } it may be regarded as a more soft and earthy variety. Its color is a greenish-gray, brown, or black. It is opaque, yields easily to the knife, and has often a greasy feel. Lyell. Cyc.

Gray-wacke is a name given to certain hard sandstones, or grit-rocks, and the associated strata occurring below the coal formation. Dana.

WAD, (wod,) n. [G. watte; Dan. vat, a wad; that is, a mass or collection.]

1. A little mass of some soft or flexible material, such as hay, straw, tow, paper, or old rope yarn, used for stopping the charge of powder in a gun and pressing it close to the shot, or for keeping the powder and shot close.

2. A little mass, tuft, or bundle, as of hay or tow.

WAD, } n. In mineralogy, an earthy oxyd of man-
WADD, } ganese, of which there are four varieties; fibrous, ochery, pulverulent ochery, and dendritic. In some places, plumbago, or black lead, is called wad or wadd. Cyc.

WAD'DED, a. Formed into a wad or mass.

WAD'DING, n. [G. watte.]

1. A wad or the materials for wads; any pliable substance of which wads may be made.

2. A kind of soft stuff of loose texture, used for stuffing garments; also, sheets of carded cotton prepared for the same purpose.

WAD'DLE, (wod'dl,) v. i. [This seems to be a diminutive formed on the root of wade, L. vado, to go; G. waten, to wade; watscheln, to waddle.]

1. To move one way and the other in walking; to deviate to one side and the other; to vacillate; as, a child waddles when he begins to walk; very fat people walk with a kind of waddling pace. So we say, a duck or a goose waddles.

2. To walk with a waddling motion.

And hardly waddles forth to cool. Swift.

WAD'DLER, (wod'dler,) n. One that waddles.

WAD'DLING, ppr. or a. Moving from side to side in walking.

WAD'DLING-LY, adv. With a vacillating gait. Entick.

WADE, v. i. [Sw. vada; D. waaden; G. waten; Dan. vader; Fr. gueer, for gueder; It. guadare; Sp. vadear; L. vado, to go. Qu. Heb. אבר, avad, to go.]

1. To walk through any substance that yields to the feet; as, to wade through water; to wade through sand or snow. To wade over a river, is to walk through on the bottom. Fowls that wade have long legs.

2. To move or pass with difficulty or labor; as, judges wade through an intricate law case. It is not my purpose to wade through these controversies.

The king's admirable conduct has waded through all these difficulties. Davenant.
And wades through fumes, and gropes his way. Dryden.

WADE, v. t. To pass by walking on the bottom; as, to wade a river.

[This is a common expression, but elliptical for, to wade through a river.]

WADE'ER, n. One that wades. An order of birds that wade in water for their prey are called waders.

WA'FER, n. [D. wafel; G. waffel; Dan. vaffel; Sw. vaffla; Russ. vaphel; Fr. gauffre.]

1. A thin cake or leaf; as, a wafer of bread given by the Roman Catholics in the eucharist.

2. A thin leaf of paste, or a composition of flour, the white of eggs, isinglass, and yeast, spread over with gum-water and dried; used in sealing letters.

WA'FER, v. t. To seal or close with a wafer.

WA'FER-ED, pp. Sealed with a wafer.

WAF'FLE, (wof'fl,) n. [D. wafel, G. waffel.]

A thin cake baked hard and rolled, or a soft indented cake baked in an iron utensil on coals.

WAF'FLE-I-RON, (wof'fl-i-urn,) n. A utensil for baking waffles.

WAFT, v. t. [Perhaps from wave; if so, it belongs to the root of wag.]

1. To bear through a fluid or buoyant medium; to convey through water or air; as, a balloon was wafted over the channel.

Speed the soft intercourse from soul to soul,
And waft a sigh from Indus to the pole. Pope.

2. To convey, as ships. Cyc.

3. To buoy; to cause to float; to keep from sinking. Brown.

4. To beckon; to give notice by something in motion. [Not in use.]

[This verb is regular. But waft was formerly used by some writers for wafted.]

WAFT, v. i. To float; to be moved or to pass in a buoyant medium.

And now the shouts waft near the citadel. Dryden.

WAFT, n. A floating body; also, a signal displayed from a ship's stern, by hoisting an ensign furled in a roll to the head of the staff. Cyc.

WAG, n. [from the verb.] A droll; a man full of low sport and humor; a ludicrous fellow.

We wink at wags, when they offend. Dryden.
The counselor never pleaded without a piece of packthread in his hand, which he used to twist about his finger all the while he was speaking; the wags used to call it the thread of his discourse. Addison.

WAGE, v. t. [G. wagen; D. waagen; Sw. väga, to venture, to dare, to wage; Fr. gager, for guager, to lay or bet; from the root of wag. The sense is, to throw, to lay or throw down, as a glove or gauntlet.]

1. To lay; to bet; to throw down, as a pledge; to stake; to put at hazard on the event of a contest. This is the common popular sense of the word in New England; as, to wage a dollar; to wage a horse.

2. To venture; to hazard.

To wake and wage a danger profitless. Shak.

3. To make; to begin; to carry on; that is, to go forward, or advance to attack, as in invasion or aggression; used in the phrase to wage war. He waged war with all his enemies.

He pondered, which of all his sons was fit
To reign, and wage immortal war with wit. Dryden.

4. To set to hire.

Thou must wage
Thy works for wealth. [Not in use.] Spenser.

5. To take to hire; to hire for pay; to employ for wages; as, waged soldiers. He was well waged and rewarded. [Fr.] [Obs.] Raleigh.

To wage one's law; to give security to make one's law. The defendant is then to swear that he owes nothing to the plaintiff, and eleven neighbors, called compurgators, are to avow upon their oaths that they believe in their consciences that he has declared the truth. This is called wager of law. Blackstone.

WA'GED, pp. Laid; deposited, as a pledge; made or begun, as war.

WA'GER, n. Something deposited, laid, or hazarded, on the event of a contest or some unsettled question; a bet.

Besides these plates for horse-races, the wagers may be as the persons please. Temple.
If any atheist can stake his soul for a wager against such an inexhaustible disproportion. Bentley.

2. Subject on which bets are laid. Sidney.

3. In law, an offer to make oath of innocence or non-indebtedness; or the act of making oath, together with the oaths of eleven compurgators, to fortify the defendant's oath.

Wager of battle, is when the tenant in a writ of right offers to prove his right by the body of his champion, and, throwing down his glove as a gage or pledge, thus wages or stipulates battle with the champion of the demandant, who, by taking up the glove, accepts the challenge. The champions, armed with batons, enter the list, and, taking each other by the hand, each swears to the justice of the cause of the party for whom he appears; they then fight till the stars appear, and if the champion of the tenant can defend himself till that time, his cause prevails. Blackstone.

The wager of battle, which has long been in disuse, was abolished by law in England in 1820. Wade.

WA'GER, v. t. To lay; to bet; to hazard on the issue of a contest, or on some question that is to be decided, or on some casualty. Dryden.

WĀLK, (wauk,) v. i. [Sax. wealcan, to roll or revolve; wealcere, a fuller, whence the name Walker: D. walken, to work a hat; G. walken, to full, to felt hats; walker, a fuller, Sw. valkare; Dan. valker, to full or mill cloth; valker, a fuller; valke, a pad or stuffed roll; G. wallen, to stir, to be agitated, to rove, to travel, to wander. From the same root are Russ. valyu, G. wälzen, to roll, and wälsch, foreign, Celtic, Welsh, that is, wanderers. The primary sense is, simply, to move or press, but appropriately, to roll, to press by rolling, as in hatting, and this is the origin of walker, for the practice of felting hats must have preceded that of fulling cloth in mills. Our ancestors appropriated the verb to moving on the feet, and the word is peculiarly expressive of that rolling or wagging motion which marks the walk of clownish people. Qu. Heb. גלל.]

1. To move slowly on the feet; to step slowly along; to advance by steps moderately repeated; as animals. Walking, in men, differs from running only in the rapidity and length of the steps; but in quadrupeds, the motion or order of the feet is sometimes changed.

WAP'EN-TAKE, } n. [Sax. wæpen-tac; but it is rather WAP'EN-TAC, } Gothic, as this division of a county was peculiar to the northern counties; wæpen, a weapon, and tac, tace, touch; Goth. tekan. (See TOUCH.) This name had its origin in a custom of touching lances or spears when the hundreder or chief entered on his office. "Cum quis accipiebat præfecturam wapentachii, die statuto in loco ubi consueverant congregari, omnes majores natu contra eum conveniebant, et descendente eo de equo suo, omnes assurgebant ei. Ipse vero erecta lancea sua, ab omnibus secundum morem fœdus accipiebat; omnes enim quotquot venissent cum lanceis suis ipsius hastam tangebant, et ita se confirmabant per contactum armorum, pace palam concessa. Wæpnu enim arma sonat; tac, tactus est — hac de causa totus ille conventus dicitur Wapentac, eo quod per tactum armorum suorum ad invicem confœderati sunt." LL. Edward Confessor, 33. Wilkins.

Lye seems to doubt this explanation of the word wapentac, because the word tac is not found in the Saxon. He seems not to have considered that the word is known only in the north of England, where the Gothic dialects prevailed; and surely the word must have been understood in the age of Edward the Confessor.]

In some northern counties of England, a division or district, answering to the HUNDRED or CANTRED in other counties. Yorkshire is divided into wapentakes, instead of hundreds. The name was first given to the meeting, supra. Selden. Blackstone. Wilkins.

WAR, (waur,) n. [Sax. wær; Fr. guerre; It. Sp. and Port. guerra; D. warren, to quarrel, wrangle, entangle; Dan. virrer; G. verwirren, to perplex, embroil, disturb. The primary sense of the root is, to strive, struggle, urge, drive, or to turn, to twist.]

1. A contest between nations or states, carried on by force, either for defense, or for revenging insults and redressing wrongs, for the extension of commerce or acquisition of territory, or for obtaining and establishing the superiority and dominion of one over the other. These objects are accomplished by the slaughter or capture of troops, and the capture and destruction of ships, towns, and property. Among rude nations, war is often waged and carried on for plunder. As war is the contest of nations or states, it always implies that such contest is authorized by the monarch or the sovereign power of the nation. When war is commenced by attacking a nation in peace, it is called an offensive war, and such attack is aggressive. When war is undertaken to repel invasion or the attacks of an enemy, it is called defensive, and a defensive war is considered as justifiable. Very few of the wars that have desolated nations and deluged the earth with blood, have been justifiable. Happy would it be for mankind, if the prevalence of Christian principles might ultimately extinguish the spirit of war, and if the ambition to be great, might yield to the ambition of being good.

Preparation for war is sometimes the best security for peace. Anon.

2. In poetical language, instruments of war.

His complement of stores, and total war. Prior.

3. Poetically, forces; army.

2. To turn or incline from a straight, true, or proper course; to deviate.

There's our commission,
From which we would not have you warp. Shak.
Methinks
My favor here begins to warp. Shak.

3. To fly with a bending or waving motion; to turn and wave, like a flock of birds or insects. The following use of warp is inimitably beautiful:

As when the potent rod
Of Amram's son, in Egypt's evil day,
Waved round the coast, up called a pitchy cloud
Of locusts, warping on the eastern wind. Milton.

4. To slink; to cast the young prematurely; as cows.

In an inclosure, near a dog-kennel, eight heifers out of twenty warped. [Local.] Cyc.

WARP, v. t. To turn or twist out of shape, or out of a straight direction, by contraction. The heat of the sun warps boards and timber.

2. To turn aside from the true direction; to cause to bend or incline; to pervert.

Less warranted than this, or less secure,
I can not be. Milton.

5. To declare with assurance.

My neck is as smooth as silk, I warrant ye. L'Estrange.

6. In law, to secure to a grantee an estate granted; to assure.

7. To secure to a purchaser of goods the title to the same; or to indemnify him against loss.

8. To secure to a purchaser the good quality of the goods sold. [See WARRANTY.]

9. To assure that a thing is what it appears to be, which implies a covenant to make good any defect or loss incurred by it.

WAR'RANT, n. An act, instrument, or obligation, by which one person authorizes another to do something which he has not otherwise a right to do; an act or instrument investing one with a right or authority, and thus securing him from loss or damage; a word of general application.

2. A precept authorizing an officer to seize an offender and bring him to justice. A general warrant to seize suspected persons is illegal.

3. Authority; power that authorizes or justifies any act. Those who preach the gospel have the warrant of Scripture. We have the warrant of natural right to do what the laws do not forbid; but civility and propriety may sometimes render things improper which natural right warrants.

4. A commission that gives authority, or that justifies.

5. A voucher; that which attests or proves

6. Right; legality.

There's warrant in that theft
Which steals itself when there's no mercy left. [Obs.] Shak.

7. A writing which authorizes a person to receive money or other thing.

Warrant of attorney; written authority given by a client to his attorney, to appear for him in court, and to suffer judgment to pass against him by confession in favor of some specified person. Bouvier.

WAR'RAN-TISE, n. Authority; security. [Not in use.] Shak.

WAR-RANT-OR', n. One who warrants.

WAR'RAN-TY, n. In law, a promise or covenant by deed, made by the bargainer for himself and his heirs, to warrant or secure the bargainee and his heirs against all men in the enjoyment of an estate or other thing granted. Such warranty passes from the seller to the buyer, from the feoffor to the feoffee, and from the releaser to the releasee. Warranty is real, when annexed to lands and tenements granted in fee or for life, &c., and is in deed or in law; and personal, when it respects goods sold or their quality.

In the contract of insurances there are also certain warranties which induce the insurer to enter into it, as that the vessel is seaworthy, &c.

In common recoveries, a fictitious person is called to warranty. In the sale of goods or personal property, the seller warrants the title; for warranty is express or implied. If a man sells goods which are not his own, or which he has no right to sell, the purchaser may have satisfaction for the injury. And if the seller expressly warrants the goods to be sound and not defective, and they prove to be otherwise, he must indemnify the purchaser. But the warranty must be at the time of sale, and not afterward. In general, there is no implied warranty of the quality of the goods sold Blackstone.

2. Authority; justificatory mandate or precept.

If they disobey any precept, that is no excuse to us, nor gives us any warranty to disobey likewise. Kettlewell.

[In this sense, WARRANT is now used.]

3. Security.

The stamp was a warranty of the public. Locke.

In Ar. wadi signifies a stream, or the channel where water flows in winter, but which is dry in summer; a thing common on the plains of Syria and Arabia.]

1. A fluid, the most abundant and most necessary for living beings of any in nature, except air. Water, when pure, is colorless, destitute of taste and smell, ponderous, transparent, and in a very small degree compressible. It is reposited in the earth in inexhaustible quantities, where it is preserved fresh and cool, and from which it issues in springs, which form streams and rivers. But the great reservoirs of water on the globe are the ocean, seas, and lakes, which cover more than three fifths of its surface, and from which it is raised by evaporation, and uniting with the air in the state of vapor, is wafted over the earth, ready to be precipitated in the form of rain, snow, or hail.

Water, by the abstraction or loss of heat, becomes solid, or, in other words, is converted into ice or snow; and by heat it is converted into steam, an elastic vapor, one of the most powerful agents in nature. Water is a compound of oxygen and hydrogen; two volumes or measures of hydrogen gas, and one of oxygen gas. The proportion of the ingredients in weight, is 88.9 parts of oxygen to 11.1 of hydrogen. Berzelius.

WHERE, (hwāre,) adv.† [Sax. hwær; Goth. hwar; Sw. hvar; D. waar.]

1. At which place or places.

She visited the place where first she was so happy. Sidney.
In all places where I record my name, I will come to thee and I will bless thee. — Ex. xx.

2. At or in what place.

Adam, where art thou? — Gen. iii.

3. At the place in which.

Where I thought the remnant of my age
Should have been cherished by her childlike duty. Shak.

4. Whither; to what place, or from what place. Where are you going? Where are you from?

[These uses of where are common, and the first can not be condemned as vulgar.]

Any where; in any place. I sought the man, but could not find him any where.

Note. — Where seems to have been originally a noun, and was so used by Spenser. "He shall find no where safe to him." In this sense, it is obsolete; yet it implies place, its original signification.

WHERE-A-BOUT', comp. [where and about.] Near what place. Whereabout did you meet your friend?

2. Near which place. Shak.

3. Concerning which.

WHĔR′RET, v. t. [G. wirren. Qu.]

To hurry; to trouble; to tease; to give a box on the ear.

[Low, and not used in America.]

WHĔR′RET, n. A box on the ear. [Not in use.] Beaum. & Fl.

WHĔR′RY, n. [A different orthography of FERRY, formed with a strong breathing, like whistle, from the root of L. fistula.]

1. A shallow, light boat, built very sharp at both ends, for fast rowing or sailing, especially on tide rivers. Hebert.

The term has also been applied to some decked vessels used in fishing, in different parts of Great Britain and Ireland. Mar. Dict.

2. A liquor made from the pulp of crabs, after the verjuice is expressed; sometimes called CRAB-WHERRY. [Local.]

WHET, (hwet,) v. t.; pret. and pp. WHETTED or WHET. [Sax. hwettian; Sw. hvässa; Dan. hvas, sharp; hvæsser, to whet; D. wetten; G. wetzen.]

1. To rub for the purpose of sharpening, as an edge-tool; to sharpen by attrition; as, to whet a scythe or an ax.

2. To provoke; to excite; to stimulate; as, to whet the appetite.

3. To provoke; to make angry or acrimonious.

Since Cassius first did whet me against Cesar,
I have not sle Shak.

To whet on, or whet forward; to urge on; to instigate. [Not used, nor proper.] Shak.

WHET, n. The act of sharpening by friction.

2. Something that provokes or stimulates the appetite; as, sips, drams, and whets. Spectator.

WHĔTH′ER, pronoun or substitute. [Sax. hwæther. This word seems to be connected with what and the L. uter, the latter not being aspirated. The sense seems to be what, or which of two, referring either to persons or to sentences.]

1. Which of two.

Whether of them twain did the will of his father? — Matt. xxi.

Here, whether is a substitute for one of two, and signifies which; which of the two; but in this sense it is obsolete.

2. Which of two alternatives, expressed by a sentence or the clause of a sentence, and followed by or. "Resolve whether you will go or not;" that is, you will go or not go; resolve which.

Note. — In the latter use, which is now most common, whether is called an adverb. This is a mistake. It is the same part of speech as in the former example. The only difference is, that in the former example it represents or refers to a noun, and in the latter to a sentence or clause.

WHĔTH′ER-ING, n. The retention of the after-birth in cows. Gardner.

WHET′STŌNE, n. [whet and stone.] A stone used for sharpening edged instruments by friction.

WHET′STŌNE-SLĀTE, } n. Novaculite, a variety
WHET′-SLĀTE, } of slate used for sharpening instruments of iron. The light-green colored variety from the Levant is the most valuable, and is called HONESTONE. It should be kept in a damp place, that it may not become too dry and hard.

WHET′TED, pp. Rubbed for sharpening; sharpened; provoked; stimulated.

WHET′TER, n. He or that which whets or sharpens.

WHET′TING, ppr. Rubbing for the purpose of making sharp; sharpening; provoking; inciting; stimulating.

WHĒY, (hwā,) n. [Sax. hwæg; D. wei or hui.]

The serum or watery part of milk, separated from the more thick or coagulable part, particularly in the process of making cheese. In this process, the thick part is called curd, and the thin part whey.

WHĒY′ĒY, (hwā′ē,) a. Partaking of whey; resembling whey. Bacon.

WHĒY′-TUB, n. A tub in which whey stands for yielding cream, &c. Cyc.

WHICH, pron. [If this is from the Saxon hwilc or hwylc, it is from the Gothic hweleiks, which coincides with the Latin qualis; D. welk, G. welche, welcher, Dan hvilken, hvilket, Sw. hvilken. This is the probable origin of the word, and its true sense is that of the Latin quis, qualis, quicunque. In these senses it occurs in all Saxon books. Its proper use was as a pronoun of interrogation, "Hwylc man is of eow?" what man is there of you? Matt. vii. 9. "Hwylc is min modor?" who is my mother? Mark iii. 33. Its use for who, Saxon hwa, as in the Lord's prayer, "Our Father which art in heaven," is an improper application of the word. In its original sense it is used for all genders; as, which man, which woman, which thing? As an interrogative we still use it in this manner. Its use for who was of long continuance, but is happily discontinued; and our present practice accords with its original use in the Saxon.]

1. A pronoun or word of interrogation in all genders; as, which man is it? which woman was it? which is the house?

2. In reference to things, or in the neuter gender, it is a relative referring to something before mentioned; as, "God rested on the seventh day from all his work which he had made." Gen. ii. 2. In some phrases, the relative may precede the noun to which it refers.

3. Which, like other pronouns, may be used as a substitute for another word or for a sentence. "We are bound to obey all the divine commands, which we can not do without divine aid." Here which is a substitute for obey all the divine commands. The man was said to be innocent, which he was not. Here which is a substitute for innocent.

4. That which; those which; as, take which you will.

The which, by the which, &c., are obsolete.

WHICH-EV′ER, } pron. Whether one or the oth-
WHICH-SO-EV′ER, } er. Whichever road you take, it will conduct you to town.

WHIFF, n. [W. çwif, a whiff or puff, a hiss; çwiffaw, to whiff, and çwaf, a quick gust.]

1. A sudden expulsion of air from the mouth; a puff; as, the whiff of a smoker.

And seasons his whiffs with impertinent jokes. Pope.

2. In ichthyology, a flat-fish of the turbot group, Rhombus megastoma. Jardine's Nat. Lib.

WHIFF, v. t. To puff; to throw out in whiffs; to consume in whiffs.

WHIF′FLE, (whif′fl,) v. i. [D. weifelen, to waver; zweeven, to hover. This accords in sense with G. zweifeln, to doubt, which would seem to be from zwei, two, or its root. The G. has also schweifen, to rove or wander, which seems to be allied to sweep The D. has also twyffelen, to doubt, from twee, two, or its root; Sw. tvifla, Dan. tvivler, from the root of two. Yet whiffle seems to be directly from whiff.]

To start, shift, and turn; to change from one opinion or course to another; to use evasions; to prevaricate; to be fickle and unsteady.

A person of whiffling and unsteady turn of mind, can not keep close to a point of a controversy. Watts.

WHIF′FLE, v. t. To disperse with a puff; to scatter. More.

WHIF′FLE, n. Anciently, a fife or small flute.

WHIF′FLE-TREE, } n. The bar to which the traces WHIP′PLE-TREE, } of a carriage are fastened for draught.

WHIF′FLER, n. One who whiffles or frequently changes his opinion or course; one who uses shifts and evasions in argument.

2. A harbinger; an officer who went before processions to clear the way by blowing the horn or trumpet. Toone. Shak.

3. A young man who goes before a company in London on occasions of public solemnity. Cyc.

WHIG, (hwig,) n. [Sax. hwæg. See WHEY.]

Acidulated whey, sometimes mixed with buttermilk and sweet herbs; used as a cooling beverage. [Local.]

WHIG, n. [Ash, in his Dictionary, informs us that this word is from whiggam, a term used in Scotland in driving horses; whiggamor, one who drives horses. In 1648, a party of these people marched to Edinburgh to oppose the king and the duke of Hamilton; and hence the name of whig was given to the party opposed to the court.]

One of a political party which had its origin in England in the seventeenth century, in the reign of Charles I. or II., when great contests existed respecting the royal prerogatives and the rights of the people. Those who supported the king in his high claims were called tories, and the advocates of popular rights were called whigs. During the revolution in the United States, the friends and supporters of the war and the principles of the revolution were called whigs, and those who opposed them were called tories and royalists.

Where, then, when tories scarce get clear,
Shall whigs and congresses appear? M'Fingal.

WHIG, a. Pertaining to or composed of whigs.

WHIG′GAR-ĔHY, n. Government by whigs. [Cant.] Swift.

WHIG′GER-Y, n. The principles of a whig.

WHIG′GISH, a. Pertaining to whigs; partaking of the principles of whigs. Swift.

WHIG′GISM, n. The principles of a whig. Swift.

WHILE, (hwile,) n.† [Sax. hwile; Goth. hweila; G. weil; D. wyl; time, while; Dan. hvile, Sw. hvila, repose; W. çwyl, a turn, Ir. foil. See the verb.]

Time; space of time, or continued duration. He was some while in this country. One while we thought him innocent

1. That faculty of the mind by which we determine either to do or forbear an action; the faculty which is exercised in deciding, among two or more objects, which we shall embrace or pursue. The will is directed or influenced by the judgment. The understanding or reason compares different objects, which operate as motives; the judgment determines which is preferable, and the will decides which to pursue. In other words, we reason with respect to the value or importance of things; we then judge which is to be preferred; and we will to take the most valuable. These are but different operations of the mind, soul, or intellectual part of man. Great disputes have existed respecting the freedom of the will.

[Will is often quite a different thing from desire.]

A power over a man's subsistence amounts to a power over his will. Federalist, Hamilton.

2. Choice; determination. It is my will to prosecute the trespasser.

3. Choice; discretion; pleasure.

Go, then, the guilty at thy will chastise. Pope.

4. Command; direction.

Our prayers should be according to the will of God. Law.

5. Disposition; inclination; desire. "What is your will, sir?" In this phrase, the word may also signify determination, especially when addressed to a superior.

6. Power; arbitrary disposal.

Deliver me not over to the will of my enemies. — Ps. xxvii.

7. Divine determination; moral purpose or counsel.

Thy will be done. Lord's Prayer.

8. Testament; the disposition of a man's estate, to take effect after his death. Wills are written or nuncupative, that is, verbal. Blackstone.

Good will; favor; kindness. Shak.

2. Right intention. Phil. i.

Ill will; enmity; unfriendliness. It expresses less than malice.

To have one's will; to obtain what is desired.

At will. To hold an estate at the will of another, is to enjoy the possession at his pleasure, and be liable to be ousted at any time by the lessor or proprietor.

Will-with-a-wisp; Jack-with-a-lantern; ignis fatuus; a luminous appearance sometimes seen in the air over moist ground, supposed to proceed from hydrogen gas.

WILL, v. t. [Sax. willan; Goth. wilyan; D. willen; G. wollen; Sw. vilja; Dan. ville; L. volo, velle; Gr. βουλομαι; Fr. vouloir; It. volere. The sense is, to set, or to set forward, to stretch forward. The sense is well expressed by the L. propono.]

1. To determine; to decide in the mind that something shall be done or forborne, implying power to carry the purpose into effect. In this manner, God wills whatever comes to pass. So in the style of princes: "we will that execution be done."

A man that sits still is said to be at liberty, because he can walk if he wills it. Locke.

2. To command; to direct.

'Tis yours, O queen! to will
The work which duty bids me to fulfill. Dryden.

3. To be inclined or resolved to have.

There, there, Hortensio, will you any wife? Shak.

4. To wish; to desire. What will you?

5. To dispose of estate and effects by testament.

6. It is sometimes equivalent to may be. Let the circumstances be what they will; that is, any circumstances, of whatever nature.

7. Will is used as an auxiliary verb, and a sign of the future tense. When an auxiliary verb, the past tense is would. It has different significations in different persons.

1. I will go, is a present promise to go; and with an emphasis on will, it expresses determination.

2. Thou wilt go, you will go, express foretelling; simply stating an event that is to come.

3. He will go, is also a foretelling. The use of will in the plural is the same. We will, promises; ye will, they will, foretell.

WIN'CING, } ing.

WIN'ĊO-PIPE, n. The vulgar name of a little flower, that, when it opens in the morning, bodes a fair day. Bacon.

This is probably the Anagallis arvensis, often called the POOR MAN'S BAROMETER, one of the floræ horologicæ, opening its flowers regularly in the morning, and closing them toward night, except when there is much moisture in the atmosphere, when it remains shut. Tully. London.

WIND, n. [Sax. wind; D. and G. wind; Sw. and Dan. vind; W. gwynt; L. ventus; It. vento; Sp. viento; Fr. vent. This word accords with L. venio, ventum, and the Teutonic wendam, Eng. went. The primary sense is, to move, flow, rush, or drive along.]

1 Air in motion with any degree of velocity, indefinitely; a current of air. When the air moves moderate.y, we call it a light wind, or a breeze; when with more velocity, we call it a fresh breeze; and when with violence, we call it a gale, storm, or tempest. The word GALE is used by the poets for a moderate breeze, but seamen use it as equivalent to STORM.

Winds are denominated from the point of compass from which they blow; as, a north wind; an east wind; a south wind; a west wind; a south-west wind, &c.

2. The four winds; the cardinal points of the heavens.

Come from the four winds, O breath, and breathe upon these slain. — Ezek. xxxvii.

This sense of the word seems to have had its origin with the Orientals as it was the practice of the Hebrews to give to each of the four cardinal points the name of wind.

3. Direction of the wind from other points of the compass than the cardinal, or any point of compass; as, a compass of eight winds. [Obs.] Heylin.

To take or have the wind; to gain or have the advantage. Bacon.

To take wind, or to get wind; to be divulged; to become public. The story got wind, or took wind.

In the wind's eye; in seamen's language, toward the direct point from which the wind blows.

Between wind and water; denoting that part of a ship's side or bottom which is frequently brought above water by the rolling of the ship, or fluctuation of the water's surface.

To carry the wind, in the manege, is when a horse tosses his nose as high as his ears.

Constant or perennial wind; a wind that blows constantly from one point of the compass, as the trade-wind of the tropics.

Shifting, variable, or erratic winds, are such as are changeable, now blowing from one point, and now from another, and then ceasing altogether.

Stated, or periodical wind; a wind that constantly returns at a certain time, and blows steadily from one point for a certain time. Such are the monsoons in India, and land and sea breezes.

Trade wind. See in its place.

[In poetry, wind often rhymes with find; but the common pronunciation is with i short, and so let it continue.]

WIND, v. t.; pret and pp. WOUND. [Sax. windan; G. and D. winden; from wind, or the same root.]

1. To blow; to sound by blowing.

Wind the shrill horn. Pope.

[The present notion of winding a horn is not so much that of filling it with wind as of giving a prolonged and varied sound, like that described by Milton when speaking of "a winding bout of linked sweetness." Smart.]

2. To turn; to move, or cause to turn.

To turn and wind a fiery Pegasus. Shak.

WIS, v. t.; pret. WIST. [G. wissen; D. weeten; Dan. vider; Sw. veta. This is the Sax. witan, to wit.]

To think; to suppose; to imagine. [Obs.] Spenser.

WIS'DŌM, (wiz'dum,) n.† [Sax. id.; wise and dom; G. weisheit, (wisehood;) D. wysheid; Sw. visdom and vishet; Dan. visdom or viisdom. (See WISE.) Wisdom, it seems, is from the Gothic dialect.]

1. The right use or exercise of knowledge; the choice of laudable ends, and of the best means to accomplish them. This is wisdom in act, effect, or practice. If wisdom is to be considered as a faculty of the mind, it is the faculty of discerning or judging what is most just, proper, and useful; and if it is to be considered as an acquirement, it is the knowledge and use of what is best, most just, most proper, most conducive to prosperity or happiness. Wisdom in the first sense, or practical wisdom, is nearly synonymous with DISCRETION. It differs somewhat from PRUDENCE in this respect; prudence is the exercise of sound judgment in avoiding evils; wisdom is the exercise of sound judgment either in avoiding evils or attempting good. Prudence, then, is a species, of which wisdom is the genus.

Wisdom gained by experience is of inestimable value. Scott.
It is hoped that our rulers will act with dignity and wisdom; that they will yield every thing to reason, and refuse every thing to force. Ames.

2. In Scripture, human learning; erudition; knowledge of arts and sciences.

Moses was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians. — Acts vii.

3. Quickness of intellect; readiness of apprehension; dexterity in execution; as, the wisdom of Bezalcel and Aholiab. Exod. xxxi.

4. Natural instinct and sagacity. Job xxxix.

5. In Scripture theology, wisdom is true religion; godliness; piety; the knowledge and fear of God, and sincere and uniform obedience to his commands. This is the wisdom which is from above. Ps. xc. Job xxviii.

6. Profitable words or doctrine. Ps. xxxvii.

The wisdom of this world; mere human erudition; or the carnal policy of men, their craft and artifices in promoting their temporal interests; called also fleshly wisdom. 1 Cor. ii. 2 Cor. i.

The wisdom of words; artificial or affected eloquence; or learning displayed in teaching. 1 Cor. i. ii.

WĪSE, a. [Sax. wis, wise; G. weise; D. wys; Sw. vis; Dan. viis; Sax. wissan, G. wissen, to know; Sans. vid. This, in Dutch, is weeten, to know which is the Goth. witan, Sax. witan, Eng. to wit, perhaps Gr. εἰδέω. So that wise, wit, wect, wot, are all from one root, or dialectical forms of the same word; Ir. fois, feas, knowledge; W. gwys, gwyz, Sans. widja, intelligence. In general, the radical sense of know is to reach or to hold, from extension, stretching. In this case, it may be to show, to disclose, from a like sense; for in Sw. visa, Dan. viser, G. weisen, D. wysen, is to show. In this case, L. video, visum, which seems to be connected with this word, may coincide in origin with wide. Wistful, attentive, eager, is from reaching forward.]

1. Properly, having knowledge; hence, having the power of discerning and judging correctly, or of discriminating between what is true and what is false; between what is fit and proper and what is improper; as, a wise prince; a wise magistrate. Solomon was deemed the wisest man. But a man may be speculatively and not practically wise. Hence,

2. Discreet and judicious in the use or application of knowledge; choosing laudable ends, and the best means to accomplish them. This is to be practically wise. Gen. xli.

3. Skillful; dextrous.

They are wise to do evil, but to do good they have no knowledge. — Jer. iv.

4. Learned; knowing; as, the wise and the unwise. Rom. i.

5. Skilled in arts, science, philosophy, or in magic and divination. 2 Sam. xiv.

6. Godly; pious. Prov. xiii.

The Holy Scriptures, which are able to make thee wise to salvation. — 2 Tim. iii.

7. Skilled in hidden arts; a sense somewhat ironical; as, the wise woman of Brainford. Shak.

8. Dictated or guided by wisdom; containing wisdom; judicious; well adapted to produce good effects; applicable to things; as, a wise saying; a wise scheme or plan; wise conduct or management; a wise determination.

9. Becoming a wise man; grave; discreet; as, wise deportment. Milton.

WĪSE, n. [Sax. wise; G. weise; D. wys; Sw. vis; Dan. vis; Fr. guise; It. guisa; Arm. guis.]

Manner; way of being or acting.

This song she sings in most commanding wise. Sidney.
In fittest wise. Spenser.

In the foregoing form this word is obsolete. The use of it is now very limited. It is common in the following phrases.

1. In any wise.

If he that sanctified the field will in any wise redeem it. — Lev. xxvii.
Fret not thyself in any wise. — Ps. xxxvii.

2. On this wise.

On this wise ye shall bless the children of Israel. — Num. vi.

3. In no wise.

He shall in no wise lose his reward. — Matt. x.

It is used in composition, as in likewise, otherwise, lengthwise, &c. By mistake, ways is often used for it; as, lengthways for lengthwise.

WĪSE'Ā-ĊRE, (wīze'ā-ker,) n. [G. weise, wise, and sagen, to say, G. weissager, a foreteller. The proper English word would be WISE-SAYER.]

15. In consent, noting parity of state.

See! where on earth the flowery glories lie,
With her they flourished, and with her they die. Pope.

With and by are closely allied in many of their uses, and it is not easy to lay down a rule by which their uses may be distinguished. It is observed by Johnson that with seems rather to denote an instrument, and by a cause; as, he killed an enemy with a sword, but he died by an arrow. But this rule is not always observed.

With, in composition, signifies sometimes opposition, privation; or separation, departure.

WITH-AL', (with-aul',) adv. [with and all.] With the rest; together with; likewise; at the same time.

7. On the outside of; as, without the gate; without doors.

8. With exemption from. That event can not happen without great damage to our interests.

9. Unless; except.

Without, when it precedes a sentence or member of a sentence, has been called a conjunction. This is a mistake. "You will not enjoy health, without you use much exercise." In this sentence, without is a preposition still, but followed by a member of a sentence, instead of a single noun. It has no property of a connective or conjunction, and does not fall within the definition. You will not enjoy health, this fact following being removed, or not taking place; you use exercise. This use of without is nearly superseded by unless and except, among good writers and speakers; but is common in popular discourse or parlance.

WITH-OUT', adv. Not on the inside; not within.

These were from without the growing miseries. Milton.

WŌRM, (wurm,) n. [Sax. wurm; G. wurm; D. worm; Dan. orm; Sw. id., a serpent. This word is probably named from a winding motion, and the root of swarm.]

1. In common usage, any small, creeping animal, or reptile, either entirely without feet, or with very short ones, including a great variety of animals of different classes and orders, viz., certain small serpents, as the blind-worm or slow-worm; the larvas of insects, viz., grubs, caterpillars, and maggots, as the wood-worm, canker-worm, silk-worm, (the larva of a moth, (Phalæna,) which spins the filaments of which silk is made,) the grub that injures corn, grass, &c., the worms that breed in putrid flesh, the bots in the stomach of horses, and many others; certain wingless insects, as the glow-worm; the intestinal worms, or such as breed in the cavities and organs of living animals, as the tape-worm, the round-worm, the fluke, &c.; and numerous animals found in the earth, and in water, particularly in the sea, as the earth-worm or lumbricus, the hair-worm or gordius, the teredo, or worm that bores into the bottom of ships, &c. Worms, in the plural, in common usage, is used for intestinal worms, or those which breed in the stomach and bowels, particularly the round and thread worms, (ascarides and oxyurides,) which are often found there in great numbers; as we say, a child has worms.

2. In zoölogy, the term Vermes or worms has been applied to different divisions of invertebral animals, by different naturalists. Linnæus's class of Vermes includes the following orders, viz., Intestina, including the proper intestinal worms, the earth-worm, the hair-worm, the teredo, and some other marine worms; Mollusca, including the slug, and numerous soft animals inhabiting the water, particularly the sea; Testacea, including all the proper shell-fish; Zoöphyta, or compound animals, including corals, polypes, and sponges; and Infusoria, or simple microscopic animalcules. His character of the class is, spiracles obscure, jaws various, organs of sense usually tentacula, no brain, ears, nor nostrils, limbs wanting, frequently hermaphrodite. This class includes all the invertebral animals, except the insects and crustacea. The term Vermes has been since greatly limited, particularly by the French naturalists. Lamarck confined it to the intestinal worms, and some others, whose organization is equally simple. The character of his class is, suboviparous, body soft, highly reproductive, undergo no metamorphosis; no eyes, nor articulated limbs, nor radiated disposition of internal organs. Linnæus. Cyc.

WORST'ED, (wust'ed,) n. [The origin of this word is uncertain. It is usually supposed to take its name from a town in England or in Flanders.]

Yarn made of wool drawn out into long filaments by passing it, when oiled, through heated combs. It is used for stockings and various other fine fabrics. Ure.

WORST'ED, a. Consisting of worsted; made of worsted yarn; as, worsted stockings.

WŌRT, (wurt,) n. [Sax. wyrt; G. wurz: Sw. ort; Dan. urt: Fr. vert, verd; from the root of L. vireo, to grow; viridis, green.]

1. A plant; an herb; now used chiefly or wholly in compounds; as in mugwort, liverwort, spleenwort.

2. A plant of the cabbage kind.

3. New beer unfermented, or in the act of fermentation: the sweet infusion of malt. Bacon. Cyc.

WŌRTH, (wurth,) a termination, signifies a farm or court; as, in Wordsworth.

WŌRTH, (wurth,) v. i. [Sax. weorthan, to be.]

This verb is now used only in the phrases, woe worth the day, woe worth the man, &c., in which the verb is in the imperative mode, and the noun in the dative; woe be to the day.

WŌRTH, (wurth,) n. [Sax. weoth, wurth, wyrth; G. werth; D. waarde; Sw. värd: Dan. værd; W. gwerth; L. virtus, from the root of vireo. The primary sense is strength.]

1. Value; that quality of a thing which renders it useful, or which will produce an equivalent good in some other thing. The worth of a day's labor may be estimated in money, or in wheat. The worth of labor is settled between the hirer and the hired. The worth of commodities is usually the price they will bring in market; but price is not always worth.

2. Value of mental qualities; excellence; virtue; usefulness; as, a man or magistrate of great worth.

As none but she, who in that court did dwell,
Could know such worth, or worth describe so well. Waller.
All worth consists in doing good, and in the disposition by which it is done. Dwight.

3. Importance; valuable qualities; applied to things; as, these things have since lost their worth.

WŌRTH, (wurth,) a. Equal in value to. Silver is scarce worth the labor of digging and refining. In one country, a day's labor is worth a dollar; in another, the same labor is not worth fifty cents. It is worth while to consider a subject well before we come to a decision.

If your arguments produce no conviction, they are worth nothing to me. Beattie.

2. Deserving of; in a good or bad sense, but chiefly in a good sense. The castle is worth defending.

To reign is worth ambition, though in hell. Milton.
This is life indeed, life worth preserving. Addison.

3. Equal in possessions to; having estate to the value of. Most men are estimated by their neighbors to be worth more than they are. A man worth a hundred thousand dollars in the United States is called rich; but not so in London or Paris.

Worthiest of blood; an expression in law, denoting the preference of sons to daughters in the descent of estates.

WŌR'THI-ER, a. comp. More worthy.

WOT, v. i. [Originally WAT; the preterit of Sax. witan, to know, formerly used also in the present tense.]

To know; to be aware. [Obs.] Spenser.

WOULD, (wood,) pret. of WILL.† [G. wollen; L. volo.]

Would is used as an auxiliary verb in conditional forms of speech. "I would go if I could." This form of expression denotes will or resolution, under a condition or supposition.

You would go, } denote simply an event under a
He would go, } condition or supposition.

The condition implied in would is not always expressed. "By pleasure and pain I would be understood to mean what delights or molests us;" that is, if it should be asked what I mean by pleasure and pain, I would thus explain what I wish to have understood. In this form of expression, which is very common, there seems to be an implied allusion to an inquiry, or to the supposition of something not expressed.

Would has the sense of wish or pray, particularly in the phrases "would to God," "would God we had died in Egypt," "I would that you knew what conflict I have;" that is, I could wish such a thing, if the wish could avail. Here also there is an implied condition.

Would is used also for wish to do, or to have. What wouldst thou? What would he?

WOULD'ING, (wud'ding,) n. Motion of desire. [Not in use.] Hammond.

WOUND, (wound or woond,) n. [Sax. wund; D. wond; G. wunde; W. gwanu, to thrust, to stab.]

1. A breach of the skin and flesh of an animal, or of the bark and wood of a tree, or of the bark and substance of other plants, caused by violence or external force. The self-healing power of living beings, animal or vegetable, by which the parts separated in wounds tend to unite and become sound, is a remarkable proof of divine benevolence and wisdom.

2. Injury; hurt; as, a wound given to credit or reputation.

[Walker condemns the pronunciation woond as a "capricious novelty." It is certainly opposed to an important principle of our language, viz., that words in ou, of Saxon origin, retain the regular Saxon sound of ow, as sound, ground, found, &c., while words derived from the French have the sound of ou in that language, as soup, group, &c. It is very undesirable to break in upon this rule, though woond is undoubtedly the fashionable pronunciation. — Ed.]

WOUND, (wound or woond,) v. t. To hurt by violence; as, to wound the head or the arm; to wound a tree.

He was wounded for our transgressions. —Is. liii.

X.

X, THE twenty-fourth letter of the English alphabet, is borrowed from the Greek. In the middle and at the end of words, it has the sound of ks, as in wax, lax, luxury. At the beginning of a word, it has precisely the sound of z. It is used as an initial in a few words borrowed from the Greek.

As a numeral, X stands for 10. It represents one V, which stands for 5, placed on the top of another. When laid horizontally, thus, ⋈, it stands for 1000; and with a dash over it, thus, $\overline{X}$, it stands for 10,000. As an abbreviation, X. stands for Christ, as in Xn. Christian, Xm. Christmas.

Y.

Y, THE twenty-fifth letter of the English alphabet, is taken from the Greek υ. At the beginning of words, it is called an articulation or consonant, and with some propriety, perhaps, as it brings the root of the tongue in close contact with the lower part of the palate, and nearly in the position to which the close g brings it. Hence it has happened that in a great number of words, g has been changed into y, as the Sax. gear into year, geornian into yearn, gyllan into yell, gealew into yellow.

In the middle and at the end of words, y is precisely the same as i. It is sounded as i long, when accented, as in defy, rely; and as i short, when unaccented, as in vanity, glory, synonymous. This latter sound is a vowel. At the beginning of words, y answers to the German and Dutch j.

Y, as a numeral, stands for 150, and with a dash over it, $\overline{Y}$, for 150,000.

YACHT, (yot,) n. [D. jagt; G. jacht, from jagen. It is originally a boat drawn by horses.] A light and elegantly furnished vessel, used either for private parties of pleasure, or as a vessel of state to convey princes, &c., from one place to another.

YEAR, n. Sax. gear; G. jahr; D. jaar; Sw. år; Dan. aar; Sans. jahran; probably a course or circle; the root gar, ger, signifying to run.]
1. The space or period of time in which the sun moves through the twelve signs of the ecliptic, or whole circle, and returns to the same point. This is the solar year, and the year in the strict and proper sense of the word. It is called also the tropical or equinoctial year. This period comprehends what are called the twelve calendar months, or 365 days, 5 hours, 48 minutes, and 47 7-10 seconds. But in popular usage, the year consists of 365 days, and every fourth year of 366; a day being added to February on that year, on account of the excess above 365 days.
2. The time in which any planet completes a revolution; as, the year of Jupiter or of Saturn.
3. The time in which the fixed stars make a revolution is called the GREAT YEAR.
4. Years, in the plural, is sometimes equivalent to age or old age; as, a man in years.
In popular language, year is often used for years. The horse is ten year old.

Yonder men are too many for an embassy. Bacon.
Read thy lot in yon celestial sign. Milton.
Yon flowery arbors, yonder alleys green. Milton.

YON, } adv. At a distance within view. When YOND, } we use this word, we often point the YON'DER, } hand or direct the eye to the place or object.

First and chiefest, with thee bring Him that yon soars on golden wing. Milton.
Yonder are two apple-women scolding. Arbuthnot.

YOND, a. Mad; furious, or alienated in mind; that is, gone, wandering; and allied to the preceding [Obs.] Spenser.

YŌNK'ER, (yunk'er,) n. A young fellow. Walter Scott.

YORE, adv. [Sax. geara. It probably signifies past, gone, from the root of year.] Long. [Obs.] Spenser.
Of yore; of old time; long ago; as, in times or days of yore.

But Satan now is wiser than of yore. Pope.

YOŪ, (yu,) pron. [Sax. eow, iu, iuch: G. euch; Arm. chuy: D. gu or yu, thou. You has been considered as in the plural only, and is so treated in the Saxon grammar. But from the Belgic dialect, it appears to be in the singular as well as the plural, and our universal popular usage, in applying it to a single person with a verb in the singular number, is correct. Yourself is in the singular number.]
1. The pronoun of the second person, in the nominative or objective case. In familiar language, it is applied to an individual, as thou is in the solemn style. In the plural, it is used in the solemn style in the objective case.

In vain you tell your parting lover,
You wish fair winds may waft him over. Prior.
He that despiseth you, despiseth me. — Luke x.

2. You is used, like on in French, for any one. This at a distance looks like a rock; but as you approach it, you see a little cabin.

YOUNG, (yung,) a. [Sax. iong, geong; G. jung; D. jong; Sw. and Dan. ung; Arm. yaouncg; W. ieuanc; Sans. yuwana; L. juvenis. Qu. Ch. Syr. Heb. and Sam. נער, to suck, or Goth. yuggs, young. The Welsh makes the word a compound, and the origin is not evident.]
1. Not having been long born; being in the first part of life; not old; used of animals; as, a young child; a young man; a young fawn.
2. Being in the first part of growth; as, a young plant; a young tree.
3. Ignorant; weak; or rather, having little experience.

Come, elder brother, thou'rt too young in this. Shak.

YOUR, (yūre,) a. pronoun. [from you; Sax. eower; G. euer.]
1. Belonging to you; equally applicable to both numbers; as, your father; your heart; your prince; your subjects.
2. It is used indefinitely.

Your medalist and your critic are much nearer related than the world imagine. Addison.

3. Yours is used as a substitute for a noun in the nominative or objective. This book is yours. I have no pen; give me yours. My sword and yours are kin. Shak.

YOUR-SELF', pron.; pl. YOURSELVES. [your and self] A word added to you, to express distinction emphatically between you and other persons. This work you must do yourself; or you yourself must do it; that is, you and no other person.
Sometimes it is used without you.

Allow obedience, if yourselves are old. Shak.

It is used as the reciprocal pronoun. You love only yourself; you have brought this calamity on yourselves; be but yourselves.

YOUTH, (yūth,) n. [Sax. iuguth, iugoth, iogoth, geogath; Goth. yuggs; G. jugend; D. jeugd.]
1. The part of life that succeeds to childhood. In a general sense, youth denotes the whole early part of life, from infancy to manhood; but it is not unusual to divide the stages of life into infancy, childhood, youth, and manhood. In this sense, the word can have no plural.

Those who pass their youth in vice, are justly condemned to spend their age in folly. Rambler.

2. A young man. In this sense, it has a plural.

Seven youths from Athens yearly sent. Dryden.

3. A young person, male or female.

GRĀIL, n. (Derived by Heyse, through the old Fr. greal, or graalz, from the Latin of the middle ages, gradalis.) The Holy Grail, according to the legends of the middle ages, was the cup used by our Savior in dispensing the wine at the last supper. By some it was said to have been preserved by Joseph of Arimathea, who received into it the blood which flowed from the Redeemer's wounds as he hung on the cross. By others it was said to have been brought down from heaven by angels, and committed to the charge of a body of knights, who guarded it on the top of a lofty mountain. This cup, according to the legend, if approached by any but a perfectly pure and holy person, would be borne away and vanish from their sight. This led to the quest of the Holy Grail, which was to be sought for on every side by a knight who was perfectly chaste in thought, word, and act. It is to this that some of the later English poets have referred, especially Tennyson in his Sir Galahad:

"Sometimes on lonely mountain meres
I find a magic bark;
I leap on board; no helmsman steers;
I float till all is dark.
A gentle sound, an awful light!
Three angels bear the Holy Grail:
With folded feet, in stoles of white,
On sweeping wings they sail."

One portion of a fruit which spontaneously divides into two halves, as in the Umbelliferæ. A. Gray.
HEM-I-HĒ′DRAL, a. [sub.] [Gr. ἡμι, half, and ἕδρα, face.]
In crystallography, having half of the similar edges or angles similarly replaced; formed by a replacement of half the similar parts in a crystal, instead of all; consisting of half the planes which a full symmetry would require; as, when a cube has planes only on one half of its eight solid angles, or one plane out of a pair on each of its edges; as, in the case of a tetrahedron which is hemihedral to an octahedron, it being contained under four of the planes of an octahedron. Dana.
HEM-I-HĒ′DRAL-LY, adv. In a hemihedral manner.
HEM-I-HĒ′DRISM, n. In crystallography, the property of crystallizing hemihedrally. Dana.
HEM-I-HĒ′DRON, n. [Gr. ἡμι, half, and ἕδρα, face.]
In crystallography, a solid hemihedrally derived. Thus the tetrahedron is in fact a hemihedron, it being derived from a cube by replacing half of its solid angles. Dana.
HEM-I-MŌRPH′IC, a. [Gr. ἡμι, half, and μορφή, form.]
In crystallography, having the two ends of a crystal modified with unlike planes. Dana.
HEM-I-PRIS-MĂT′IC, a. [add.] In crystallography, noting a hemiprism. Dana.
HĔM′I-PRISM, n. [Gr. ἡμι, half, and πρίσμα, prism.]
In the monoclinic and triclinic systems of crystalline forms, a form that comprises but one face of a prism and its opposite. Dana.
HEM-I-SPHE-ROID′AL, a. Approaching to the figure of a hemisphere. Wright.
HE-MĪT′RO-PAL, } a. In bot., half inverted or HE-MĪT′RO-POUS, } turned around. A. Gray.
HĔM′I-TROPE, n. [add.] [Gr. ἡμι, half, and τρέπω, to turn.]
A twin crystal; a form which may be imitated artificially by cutting a crystal into two halves, and then inverting one half and uniting the separated faces. Dana.

HO-MO-CĔR′CAL, *a. [Gr. ὁμός, common, and κέρκος, a tail.]
In fishes, having the tail symmetrical, the vertebral column terminating at its commencement; opposed to hetero-cercal in which the vertebral column extends to the extremity of the upper lobe. Agassiz.
HO-MŒ-O-MŌRPH′ISM, n. [Gr. ὅμοιος, similar, and μορφή, form.]
A near similarity of crystalline forms between unlike chemical compounds or inorganic species; isomorphism. Dana.
HO-MŒ-O-MŌRPH′OUS, a. Approximately similar in crystalline form. Dana.
HOM-Œ-O-ZŌ′IC, a. [Gr. ὅμοιος, similar, and ζωή, life.]
A term denoting similarity in kinds of life; as, homœozoic belts on the earth's surface. E. Forbes.
HO-MO-GĂNG′LI-ATE, a. [Gr. ὁμός, like, and γάγγλιον, a ganglion.]
Having the nervous ganglions symmetrically arranged; as, in the Invertebrates. Dana.
HO-MO-LŎG′IC-AL, a. [add.] Proceeding from, or based upon, that kind of relation termed homology. Dana.

HOM-O-LŌ-ĠĬC-AL-LY, adv. In a homological sense or manner. Dana.

HO-MŎL'O-ĠĪZE, v. t. To determine the homologies or structural relations of any organ. Dana.

HO-MŌL'O-GOUS, a. [add.] Being of the same typical structure, as in the examples mentioned under HOMOLOGY; having like relations to a fundamental type of structure; as, those bones in the hand of man and the fore-foot of a horse are homologous that correspond in their structural relations, that is in their relations to the type-structure of the fore-limb in Vertebrates. Dana.

HŌM'O-LŌGUE, n. That which is homologous with any given part in a related structure; as, this or that bone in the hand of man is the homologue of that in the paddle of a whale.

2. That organ or structure which is homologous with another; as, the paddle of a whale is the homologue of the wing of a bird or of the arm of man. Dana.

HO-MŎL'O-ĠY, n. [add.] [Gr. ὁμός, similar, and λόγος, discourse.]

In organic beings, correspondence or relation in type of structure; as, the relation in structure between the leg and arm of man; or that between the arm of a man, fore-leg of a horse, wing of a bird, and fin of a fish, the structures of all these organs being due to modifications of one type of structure. It differs from analogy, which is a relation or correspondence in functions; there is analogy between the wing of a bird and that of a bat, but not homology. Dana.

HO-MO-MĂL'LOUS, a. [Gr. ὁμός, similar, and ἅλλομαι, to leap or rise.]

In bot., noting a similarity in bending or curving to one side, of leaves, &c., originating all round a stem. A. Gray.

It is wholly empirical, i. e. no physical origin or cause for it is known; nevertheless, and notwithstanding the existence of exceptions or irregularities, it points to some conditioned arrangement in our planet.

Kepler's laws, are three important laws or expressions of the order of the planetary motions, discovered by John Kepler. They are these:—

1. The orbit of every planetary body is an ellipse, in one of whose foci the sun is situated.

2. The radius vector of each planet, sweeps in equal times over equal areas.

3. The squares of the times of revolution of two planets, are in the ratio of the cubes of their mean distances from the sun, or from the foci of the ellipse in which they move.

Marriotte's law, is an expression of the fact, that in an elastic fluid subjected to compression, and kept at constant temperature, the product of the pressure and volume is a constant quantity, or the volume is inversely proportioned to the pressure. This law is the foundation of the whole theory of elastic fluids. Nichol.

An instrument with two lenses by which a stereoscopic effect may be obtained from a single picture. Dana.

STĒ'RE-O-SCŌPE, n. [Gr. στερεός, solid, and σκοπέω, to see.]
An optical contrivance for giving to pictures the appearance of solid forms, as seen in nature. It depends for its operation on the following fact. An object viewed by both eyes does not appear to each under the same angle; hence, whatever we look upon is apprehended by the sense of vision through the medium of two distinct images, which unite in the two retinæ and give us the idea of substance and solidity. The stereoscope is intended to accomplish the same end. It consists of a close box and two eye-pieces. Into this box are put two photographic pictures of the same object (one for each eye-piece) taken under a small difference of angular view. Each eye therefore looks on one picture only; but by a bending of the rays of light, through refraction or reflection, the two pictures are superimposed and united so as to appear but one to the observer. Thus the same effect is produced as in natural vision, and the objects presented in the picture have all the appearance of solid forms; hence the name. Brewster.

STĒ-RE-O-SCŌP'IC, a. Pertaining to the stereoscope, as in the stereoscopic function of the two eye-glasses; adapted to the stereoscope, as stereoscopic pictures; seen through it, as stereoscopic views.

PREFACE.

THE publishers of Webster's larger English Dictionary, desiring to append to it tables prepared expressly for their edition, which should exhibit the correct pronunciation of Scriptural, Classical, and Modern Geographical Names, requested the subscriber to undertake the direction of the work. This service has been performed in the following manner:—

The list of Scriptural Names added by Taylor to his edition of Calmet's "Dictionary of the Bible," has been carefully collated with that prepared by Walker. In those cases in which the pronunciation of Walker differs from Taylor's, Walker's method has been subjoined, or substituted in its place. The methods of Walker and of Taylor generally coincide, and the authority of Taylor has been preferred to that of Walker in those instances only in which Walker's is opposed by the best and the established usage. The words omitted by Taylor have been added from Walker, and the table, in the number of names and in their pronunciation, is substantially the same with that which usually accompanies Walker's "Key."

The table of Greek and Latin Proper Names contains all the classical names which are found in Walker's table, together with such as are furnished in addition by Trollope, in his edition of Walker's "Key," and by Thomas Swinburne Carr, in his "Classical Pronunciation of Proper Names." A few have also been taken from Pauly's "Encyclopedia of Classical Antiquities," and from Freund's "Dictionary of the Latin Language."

This table has been revised by Professor Thacher, of Yale College. In conducting this revision, he found it necessary to correct numerous errors, especially in the division of words into syllables, which, from errors of the press, a confusion of principles, and a want of care in the application of the rules, have been accumulated in other published tables of Proper Names. It will be seen, on noticing the changes which have been introduced, that the aim has been to remove all inconsistencies in the application of the rules of pronunciation which have been adopted by Walker in common with many others.

A few errors of accent have also been corrected, as more recent investigations have ascertained the quantity of some words, which earlier lexicographers, guided only by the general rules of quantity, had given erroneously.

The pronunciation of these names is in all cases determined by the place of the accent, and by the forms of the syllables which the accent determines. To attempt to indicate to the English ear the sounds of the vowels by marks which in classical usage are employed to indicate their quantity, would only lead to confusion, and cannot fail to be especially disadvantageous to students of the languages. The classical table is accompanied by a few rules, designed to guide the scholar in settling those questions of pronunciation which are not answered in the table itself. These rules do not disagree with those adopted in Walker's "Key;" but, in connection with the table, will guide to that pronunciation which is in vogue at the University of Oxford and other learned schools. It is believed that these few rules will be found to be more convenient and useful than the corresponding ones in Walker's "Key."

The same preference will be given, it is believed, to the rules abridged from Walker, which accompany the Scripture Proper Names.

The Modern Geographical Names were mostly selected from Black's "General Atlas," (Edinburgh, 1846,) as being the latest and best authority. The design of the compiler was, primarily, to present the names of the countries, provinces, important towns, rivers, &c., on the continent of Europe and Spanish America, and to indicate their pronunciation as perfectly as this can be represented by English sounds. As these names frequently occur in books of all kinds, and occasion great perplexity to the reader and public speaker, and as their pronunciation is conformed to that of the languages to which they belong, it was thought advisable to prepare a copious list of words of this character, and to give them the chief place in the table. When these words have been Anglicized, the Anglicized has been subjoined to the native pronunciation.

To these European names many others have been added of places in Great Britain and the United States, in respect to the pronunciation of which, it was thought, information would be esteemed of any value, or could be given with any exactness. In a few instances, a provincial, and what will be thought by some an improper, method has been given. It was thought, however, to be impossible and useless to attempt to furnish a complete list of English and American names, with their pronunciation. The pronunciation of the great majority of these names is familiar to all, and is never sought for in a dictionary, while that of a very large number can hardly be considered as fixed.

A few names of places in other and ruder countries are given. There are two reasons, however, why it was not thought expedient to swell the list with names of this character. They are, in most cases, the result of an effort to represent native sounds by English spelling. If this representation is imperfect, it is of little authority, and is liable to constant changes. If it is perfect, or nearly so, the pronunciation is indicated by the name itself.

The catalogue of European names was prepared by a gentleman familiar with the countries and the languages in which the names occur; and it is believed that the pronunciation and the accent are as well represented as the nature of the work and the means at hand would allow. No pains have been spared to render this table as complete and convenient as any within reach of the public.

PRONOUNCING VOCABULARY

OF

SCRIPTURE PROPER NAMES.

RULES

FOR THE

PRONUNCIATION OF SCRIPTURE PROPER NAMES.

[ABRIDGED FROM WALKER'S KEY.]

---

1. In the pronunciation of the letters of the Hebrew proper names, we find nearly the same rules prevail as in those of Greek and Latin. Where the vowels end a syllable with the accent on it, they have their long, open sound; as, Na'bal, Je'hu, Si'rach, Go'shen, and Tu'bal.

2. When a consonant ends the syllable, the preceding vowel is short; as, Sam'u-el, Lem'u-el, Sim'e-on, Sol'o-mon, Suc'coth, Syn'a-gogue.

3. Every final i forming a distinct syllable, though unaccented, has the long, open sound; as, A'i, A-ris'a-i.

4. Every unaccented i ending a syllable not final, is pronounced like e; as, A'ri-el, Ab'di-el, pronounced A're-el, Ab'de-el.

5. The vowels ai are sometimes pronounced in one syllable, and sometimes in two; as, Ben-ai'ah, Hu'shai, Hu'rai, &c.; or, as Sham'ma-i, Shash'a-i, Ber-a-i'ah, &c., following in these, as in most Hebrew proper names, the pronunciation of the Septuagint version of the Bible.

6. Ch is pronounced like k; as, Chemosh, Enoch, &c., pronounced Kemosh, Enok, &c. Cherubim and Rachel seem to be perfectly Anglicized, as the ch in these words is always heard as in the English words cheer, child, riches, &c. The same may be observed of Cherub, signifying an order of angels; but when it means a city of the Babylonish empire, it ought to be pronounced Ke'rub.

7. Almost the only difference in the pronunciation of the Hebrew and the Greek and Latin proper names, is in the sound of the g before e and i. In the last two languages, this consonant is always soft before these vowels; as, Gellius, Gippius, &c., pronounced Jellius, Jippius, &c.; and in the first, it is hard; as, Gera, Gerizim, Gideon, Gilgal, Megiddo, &c. This difference is without foundation in etymology; for both g and c were always hard in the Greek and Latin languages, as well as in the Hebrew; but the latter language being studied so much less than the Greek and Latin, it has not undergone that change which familiarity is sure to produce in all languages. The solemn distance of this language has not been able, however, to keep the letter c from sliding into s before e and i, in the same manner as in the Greek and Latin. Thus, though Gehazi, Gideon, &c., have the g hard, Cedrom, Cedron, Cisai, and Cittern, have the c soft, as if written Sedrom, Sedron, &c. The same may be observed of Igeabarim, Igeal, Nagge, Shage, Pagiel, with the g hard; and Ocidelus, Ocina, and Phuracion, with the c soft, like s.

8. Gentiles, as they are called, ending in ines and ites, as Philistines, Hivites, Hittites, &c., being Anglicized in the translation of the Bible, are pronounced like formatives of our own; as, Philistins, Whitfieldites, Jacobites, &c.

9. The unaccented termination ah, so frequent in Hebrew proper names, ought to be pronounced like the a in father. The a in this termination, however, frequently falls into the indistinct sound heard in the final a in Africa, Ætna, &c.; nor can we easily perceive any distinction in this respect between Elijah and Elisha; but the final h preserves the other vowels open, as Colhozeh, Shiloh, &c., pronounced Colhozee, Shilo, &c. The diphthong ei is always pronounced like ee; thus Sa-mei'us is pronounced as if written Sa-mee'us. But if the accent be on the ah, then the a ought to be pronounced like the a in father; as, Tah'e-ra, Tah'penes, &c.

10. It may be remarked, that there are several Hebrew proper names, which, by passing through the Greek of the New Testament, have conformed to the Greek pronunciation; such as Aceldama, Genezareth, Bethphage, &c., pronounced A-sel'da-ma, Jenez'a-reth, Beth'pha-je, &c. This is, in my opinion, more agreeable to the general analogy of pronouncing these Hebrew-Greek words than preserving the c and g hard.

Rules for the Quantity of the Vowels.

11. In dissyllables, with but one middle consonant, the first vowel is accented and pronounced long; as, Kō'rah, Mō'loch. The same analogy is observed in the penultimate of polysyllables; as, Balthā'sar.

12. When the accent is on the antepenultimate syllable, the vowel is always short, except when followed by two vowels; thus, Je-hos'a-phat. The secondary accent has the same shortening power when the primary accent is on the third and the secondary on the first syllable; as, Oth-o-nī'as.

Rules for placing the Accent on Hebrew Proper Names.

13. The accent of Hebrew words cannot be better regulated than by the laws of the Greek language. By this it is not intended that every word which is Græcized in the Septuagint should be accented exactly according to the Greek rule of accentuation. For many words, that are purely Greek, do, when they are Anglicized, receive the Latin accentuation, instead of retaining the Greek. When the Hebrew word has been Græcized into the same number of syllables, we prefer the Latin accentuation to what may be called our own. Thus we accent Cathua on the penult, since it comes to us through the Greek Καθουά, and because the Latins would have placed the accent on this syllable, and notwithstanding that the English ear would be better pleased with the antepenultimate accent. But when the Hebrew word does not contain the same number of syllables as the same word in the Greek, — as Mes'o-bah, Μεσωβία, Id'u-el, Ἰδουήλος, — it comes under our own analogy, and we place the accent on the antepenultimate.

14. As we never accent a proper name from the Greek on the last syllable, so, if the Greek word be accented on any other syllable, we seldom pay any regard to it, unless it coincide with the Latin accent. Thus the word Ged-e'rah is accented on the penultimate, because it is Græcized by Γάδηρα, though it is accented on the antepenultimate, and this because the penultimate is long, and the long penultimate in Latin always has the accent.

15. All words ending in ias and iah have the accent on the i, without any foundation in the analogy of Greek and Latin pronunciation, except the very vague reason that the Greek word has the accent on this syllable. This reason is called vague, because the Greek accent has no influence on words in ael, iel, ial, &c.; as, Ισραήλ, Ἀβδιήλ, Βελίαλ, κ. τ. λ. Hence the impropriety of pronouncing Messias with the accent on the first syllable. It is the broad, diphthongal sound of the English i, with the accent on it, which makes the word sound so much better in English than it does in French, or even in the true ancient Greek pronunciation.

16. The termination aim seems to attract the accent on the a only in words of more than three syllables; as E'phraim, Miz'raim, have the accent on the antepenultimate, but Horona'im, Ramatha'im, &c., on the penultimate. This is the general rule; but if the Greek word have the penultimate long, the accent ought to be on that syllable; as, Pharva'im, Φαρουίμ, &c.

17. Kemuel, Jemuel, Nemuel, and other words of the same form, having the same number of syllables as the Greek words into which they are translated, ought to have the accent on the penultimate, as that syllable is long in Greek; but Emanuel, Samuel, Lemuel, are irrecoverably accented on the antepenultimate, and follow the analogy of the English accentuation.

18. It is plain from these observations, that the Hebrew accent is regulated by a sort of compromise between this ancient language and our own; and the best we can do is to form a kind of compound ratio of Hebrew, Greek, Latin, and English, and to let each of these prevail as usage has permitted them.

SCRIPTURE PROPER NAMES.

THE basis of the following Vocabulary is that of Taylor, in "Calmet's Dictionary of the Bible." To this have been added several hundred names from Walker. In the cases in which the pronunciation of Walker differs from that of Taylor, that of Walker is added or substituted in its place. The pronunciation of Walker is not always to be preferred, nor is it followed in actual usage by the best authorities. The notation of the vowel sounds may be consulted below. — ED.

RULES

GREEK AND LATIN PROPER NAMES.

It will be perceived by a glance at the following table, that the indicated accentuation of the words, and their separation into syllables, prevent the necessity of inserting any thing here to guide to a correct pronunciation, except the rules for the sounds of the vowels and consonants.

In settling the place of the primary accent, which is the first and most important point in the pronunciation of a word, the aim, of course, has been to follow the ancient and simple rules, which direct, that, in words of two syllables, the penult be accented, and in words of more than two syllables, that the penult be accented if long in quantity, if not, the antepenult. The words have been divided into syllables, in accordance with the commonly received rules on that subject. The rules that follow have been derived, in the main, from Walker. Sometimes the language of Grant, or some other grammarian, has been preferred.

Rules for the Vowels.

1. Any vowel at the end of an accented syllable, and e, o, and u, at the end of an unaccented syllable, have the long English sound; as, Ca'to, Ce'crops, Di'do, So'lon, Cu'mæ, Me-lis'sa, Mo-los'sus, Tu-lin'gi; in which words the final vowels of the first syllables have the same sound as the corresponding vowels in the first syllables of the English words pa'per, ce'dar, si'lent, co'lon, du'ty.

2. A, ending an unaccented syllable, has the sound of a in fa'ther; as, Ga-bi'na, A-re'ne, pronounced Gah-bi'na, Ah-re'ne.

3. I, ending a final syllable, or preceding an accented vowel, has the long sound; as, I-u'li.

In all other cases, i, ending an unaccented syllable, is pronounced like e; as, Fa'bi-i, Ho-ra'ti-i, pronounced Fa'be-i, Ho-ra'te-i.

4. Y is pronounced as i would be in the same situation.

5. Æ and œ are pronounced as e would be in the same situation.

6. If a syllable end in a consonant, the vowel has the short English sound; as, Bal'bus, Del'phi, Cin'na, Mos'chus, Tus'cus, in which the vowels have the same sounds as in the English words man'ner, sel'dom, din'ner, scoff'er, mus'ter.

Exception. — E, in final es, is pronounced as in the familiar proper name An'des.

Rules for the Consonants.

1. C, before e, i, y, æ, and œ, is pronounced like s; before a, o, and u, and before consonants, like k; as, Ce'a, Cic'e-ro, Cy'prus, Cæ'sar, Cœ'li-a, Ca'to, Co'cles, Cu'mæ.

2. G, before e, i, y, æ, œ, or another g followed by e, has the sound of j; before a, o, and u, and before consonants other than g, as above excepted, the hard sound, as in the English words gave, gone; as, Ge'lo, Gi-gan'tes, Gy-gæ'us, Ag'ger, Ga'bi-i, Gor'gi-as, Sa-gun'tum.

3. Ch has the sound of k, except when preceding a mute consonant at the beginning of a word, when they are silent; as, Chtho'ni-a, pronounced Tho'ni-a.

4. T, s, and c, before ia, ie, ii, io, iu, and eu, preceded immediately by the accent, in Latin words, as in English, change into sh and zh. But when the accent falls on the first of the vowels following, the consonant does not change into sh or zh, but preserves its pure sound; as, Mil-ti'a-des, &c. T, in the termination tion, also retains its original sound; as, The-o-do'ti-on.

5. S has, in general, the sound of s in this.

Final s, preceded by e, or a liquid, has the sound of z.

6. Initial x has the sound of z.

7. Initial ph, before a mute, is silent, as, Phthi'a, pronounced Thi'a. Initial p, before s, is silent; as, Psy'che, pronounced Sy'ke. Initial p, before t, is silent; as, Ptol-e-mæ'us, pronounced Tol-e-mæ'us.

8. At the beginning of Greek words we frequently find the uncombinable consonants mn, tm, &c.; as, Mne-mos'y-ne, Tmo'lus, &c. These are to be pronounced with the first consonant mute, as if written Ne-mos'y-ne, Mo'lus, &c.

GREEK AND LATIN PROPER NAMES.

THE words in the following table to which a * is prefixed are taken from "The Classical Pronunciation of Proper Names," &c., by Thomas Swinburne Carr.

Those to which a † is prefixed are such as Trollope has added to his edition of Walker's Key.

Those marked with a ‡ are taken from Freund's "Wörterbuch der lateinischen Sprache."

Those marked with a ¶ are taken from Pauly's "Real-Encyclopädie der classischen Alterthumswissenschaft."

Those to which no mark is prefixed are found in the list usually published with Walker's Key.

It will be observed, by any who may compare this table with those of Walker and Trollope, that many changes in the division of words for pronunciation have been introduced; but it is believed that these changes are all required by a consistent application of the rules of classical pronunciation, as they are generally received.

MODERN GEOGRAPHICAL NAMES.

ENTERED, according to Act of Congress, in the year 1855,
BY GEORGE AND CHARLES MERRIAM, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court of Massachusetts.

BRIEF RULES

FOR THE

PRONUNCIATION OF THE PRINCIPAL EUROPEAN LANGUAGES.

FRENCH.

1. Vowels.

A, ah, long and short, (marked ā.)
ai, as e in there, when followed by e, re, rs, ts, s, and when it has the circumflex, thus, aî, (ê.)
When in the middle or at the end of words, it has the sound of the open acute é, (e.)
au has the sound of ō, (o.)
E has three sounds: —
é as the English vowel a in fate, (e.)
è and ê are similar to the e in there, (ê.)
E, not accented, is either,
(1.) open acute, as e in the English words met, ebb, when it is followed, in the same syllable, by a consonant that is pronounced, or when the following syllable begins with x, (ė;)
(2.) guttural, and like e in her at the end of monosyllables, or the first syllable of polysyllables, (ë;) or,
(3.) is entirely mute at the end of polysyllables. It is like the second e in there, and generally serves to lengthen or open the preceding vowel. In other places, where it is more perceptible, it is like the e in battery or over; and even then the French suppress it as often as they can, especially when the preceding or following syllable has a full sound. — Rem. Es, not accented, in polysyllables, is silent.
Ei has the sound of e in there, (êu.)
Eu has three sounds. —
(1.) long and close. This sound has no standard in English, but it may be obtained by pressing the lips a little forward, in such a manner as to leave to the breath a narrower passage than for the e in over, and by dwelling longer upon it, (e͡u.)
(2.) short, somewhat more open than e in over, (e͡ŭ.)
(3.) long and open, by opening the lips somewhat wider and in a more circular form than for the e in over, and by protracting the sound, (ê͡u.)
I is long, as in the English word marine, and short, as in fig, (ī, i.)
O has three sounds: —
(1.) long and open, as in the English word rōbe, (ō.)
(2.) short, as in rob, (o.)
(3.) long and broad, (ȯ.)
oi as wa.
ou has two sounds, — long, as in mood; short, as in good, (o͞o.)
U has two sounds, — long, as in vue, (ū;) short, as in but, (ŭ.)

There is no standard for these sounds in English. To form the first, observe the situation of the tongue in pronouncing the English letter a. It widens itself into the cheeks, so that it touches the first grinders. When the tongue is in this situation, advance both lips a little forward, shutting them at the same time in such a manner as to leave a narrow, oval passage to the breath. This movement will lightly press the tongue between the grinders, and its tip against the fore teeth of the inferior jaw, and thus let the breath pass, which is necessary to emit the sound of the French u. The short sound is formed by dwelling less upon it.

2. Consonants.

Division of Syllables. — When syllables in any word are separated by a single or compound consonant, that consonant is to be spelled and articulated with the following vowel, and not with the preceding one. By several consonants which cannot form a compound consonant, the first must be spelled with the preceding, and the remainder with the succeeding, simple or compound vowel.

Compound consonants are the following: — bl, br, ch, cl, chr, cr, dr, fl, fr, gl, gn, gr, il, and ill, (when liquid,) ph, phl, phr, pl, pr, rh, sc, sg, sl, sm, sn, sp, st, sr, th, thl, tr, tl, vr.

The French syllables are divided into masculine and feminine syllables, the latter being those that contain e mute.

General Rule. — Every masculine syllable before another masculine syllable is short, so that the accent lies upon the last syllable that is pronounced.

B has the same sound as in English.
C has,
(1.) the sound of English k before a, o, u, and before consonants;
(2.) the sound of hard s before e, i, y, and before the hard vowels, a, o, u, when with a cedilla, (ç.)
c, before q and c, and after a nasal sound, is always silent.
ch has the sound of sh, and followed by a consonant, it is like k. At the end, it sounds like k.
D is like English d. It is sounded at the end of words, unless followed by s or preceded by r or n.
F is like English f.
G has two sounds: —
(1.) the sound of g in go, before a, o, u.
(2.) the sound of s in pleasure before e, i, y.
The hard g is rendered soft before a, o, u, by inserting the letter e between g and a, o, u. The e after the g is then not to be sounded, but is considered as a mark to show that the g must be pronounced soft.
The soft g, on the other hand, is rendered hard before e, i, y, by writing the letter u between g and e, i, y. Therefore the u that is immediately after the g must not be sounded, but is to be considered as a sign that g must be articulated hard.
gn is pronounced like ni in onion, minion, (final gne, represented in the table ny.)
Final g is silent except in the noun bourg, and in nouns terminating in berg, where it has the sound of k.
H is either aspirated or silent

Remark. — When h is deemed aspirate, it only communicates to the vowel the properties of a consonant; that is to say, when the preceding word ends with a vowel, that vowel is never suppressed; if it ends with a consonant, that consonant is never connected with the vowel that follows.

J has always the sound of z in azure, or s in pleasure.
L has two sounds: —
(1.) It is like the English l.
(2.) It is liquid, like l in brilliant.

N. B. — The modern pronunciation, however, lets the l entirely disappear, and substitutes a long ē sound (ī, ĭĭ) for it.
Exception. — All nouns in ville are not liquid.

Il, ill, preceded by another vowel, are always liquid, in which case, il, ill, are compound consonants, the i being considered as a mere sign to make the l liquid; therefore the i must not be combined with the preceding vowel, which preserves its natural sound.

M, N, when not nasal, are like the English m, n.

m, n, preceded in the same syllable by a vowel, are always nasal, unless followed by a syllable that begins with a vowel or h mute, in which case, m and n resume their natural sound.

NASAL SOUND. — An exact standard for the nasal sound is not to be found in the English pronunciation. However, something like it is found in the sound of en in encore. But if, in pronouncing these sounds, the tongue should once touch the roof of the mouth, the French nasal sound would be ruined.

There are four nasal sounds: — em, am, en, an, } ăng. — om, on, oun, } ŏng, or ōng.

im, in, aim, ain, eim, ein, o–in, } ăng. — um, un, eun, eum, } ĕung.

P is like the same letter in the English language.

Q, except in a few words, is always followed by u, and these two letters together have the sound of English k in king.

R is much more rolled than the English r. At the end of a word it is always pronounced, when preceded by a, i, o, u, y, and their compounds r, preceded by e in polysyllables, is silent, and in this case the e has the acute sound e. In monosyllables, the r is pronounced, and the e has a more open sound, resembling ê.

rh is like r.

S has two sounds: —

(1.) the soft of rose, please, between two vowels and following b.

(2.) the hard sound of sister, in the beginning, and in the middle of a word, when preceded or followed by a consonant.

Final s is silent, with a few exceptions.

T has two sounds: —

(1.) soft, like c in cedar, civil, in the syllable tion, unless preceded by s or x, in which case the t is hard.

(2.) hard, like t in tit, in all other cases th has the single sound of t hard.

t, st, ct, final, are silent.

V is like English v.

X, (1.) is like gs in all words beginning in x or ex, followed by a vowel or the letter h.

(2.) like k in words beginning in exce, exci, exs.

(3.) like ss, in Aix, Aix la Chapelle, Auxerre, Auxonne, Bruxelles, Luxeuil, and some few others.

(4.) like ks in all other cases.

Final x is silent.

Z is like z in zone.

Final z is silent.

Y is like single French i, but like double i between two vowels.

ITALIAN.

1. VOWELS.

A is sounded as ah in English, (ă.)

E has two sounds: —

(1.) the open, as in the English word fair, (e and ĕ.)

(2.) close, as in the word pain, (ę)

I is sounded like ee in English.

O has two sounds: —

(1.) the open o; (2.) the close ŏ.

U is sounded like oo.

N. B. — When these vowels are at the end of words, marked with an accent, they have a quick and sharp sound.

2. CONSONANTS.

B is like the same letter in English.

C is like k before a, o, u. Followed by the vowels e, i, it is pronounced like ch in the words cherry, chilly.

cc followed by e, i, is pronounced like tch in the English word match.

cià, ció, ciù, are pronounced cha, cho, choo.

ch, followed by e, i, is pronounced like English k.

D and F are like the English d and f.

G is like the English g in go, when followed by a, o, u. Followed by the vowels e, i, it is like j in English, or like g in the words gem, ginger.

gg, followed by e, i, is pronounced like dg in the English word lodge.

gh, followed by e, i, has the sound of g in go.

gl, followed by i, and in all words in which i is followed by another vowel, is pronounced like ll in brilliant.

But in all words in which gl is followed by a consonant, it is pronounced like gl in glimmer.

gn, followed by a, e, i, o, u, is somewhat like the English ni in onion, minion.

già, gió, giù, are pronounced like ja, jo, joo.

gua, gue, gui, are like gwa, gwei, gwee, in language, languei, languid.

H has no sound. It is only used to denote the hard sound of the consonants c, g, before the vowels e, i.

J is considered a vowel. It is used instead of ii at the end of words, and sounds like ee in the English word fee, each e being distinctly pronounced.

L, M, N, and P, are like the corresponding English letters.

Q. Quà, qué, quì, qué, are pronounced like qua, que, qui, quo, in the English words quality, question, quibble, quote; the vowels a, e, i, o, adhering to their proper pronunciation, as stated above.

R, in the beginning of words, or in the middle when it begins a syllable, is like r in the words ruin, marine. At the end of words, or when it ends a syllable, or preceded by another consonant, or doubled, it has a rolling sound.

S, in the beginning of words, preceded or followed by another consonant, or when doubled, is pronounced sharp, like sister. Between two vowels, and in the last syllable of all substantive and adjective nouns that end in ese, uso, usa, it is pronounced like s in the English word rose. In the last syllable of all adjective nouns in oso, osa, s preserves its sharp sound.

sc, followed by e, i, is pronounced like sh in shell sch, followed by e, i, is pronounced like sk.

scià, sció, sciù, are like sha, sho, shoo.

T is always hard, and

V like the English v.

W and X are not found in the Italian alphabet.

Z. GENERAL RULE. — In the beginning of words, or when single, it is like ds in the English word Windsor. When preceded by a consonant, or when followed by two vowels, or when doubled, it is pronounced sharp, like ts in the word benefits.

REMARK. — Italian words are pronounced exactly as they are written, there being no silent letter, except h. Every vowel always preserves its proper sound, independently of the consonants which accompany it.

SPANISH.

1. VOWELS.

A. This letter is pronounced as ah in English, (ă.)

E is pronounced as a in the alphabet in English, (ę,) except before n, r, s, z, in which case it is more open, as in the English word care.

I is pronounced as e in English. It is long when under the acute accent, (ī.)

O is generally pronounced as in English. It is, however, necessary to observe, that it is sometimes open, (o,) sometimes close, (ō,) and sometimes long, (ō.)

It is open in words of one syllable, when it is not immediately followed by another vowel, and before n and r at the end of a syllable; at the end of a word, when it is accented. It is long whenever it is immediately followed by another vowel.

U is pronounced oo.

N. B. — From this rule must be excepted the syllables gue, gui, que, qui, in which the u is not sounded, unless the u has two dots over it, (ü.)

Y. This letter is sometimes a vowel and sometimes a consonant. It is a vowel when it is preceded by another vowel, making with it a diphthong; and then ay and ey are like i, (ī;)
oy and uy, like oi.
In almost every other case, it is a consonant.

2. Consonants.

B, in the beginning of a word, is always pronounced as in English. In the middle of a word, between two vowels, b is softened into nearly a v.

C has the sound of th in English, as in the word pith, before e and i; and the sound of k before a, o, u.
Formerly the c with the cedilla (ç) was used to soften the c before a, o, u. The letter z, however, has now been substituted for it.
Double cc, followed by e, i. The first c is hard, the second soft.
ch. These two letters are pronounced as in English in the word cheek.

D is pronounced, in the beginning of a word, as in English; but when the d is between two vowels, it is as soft as the th in the words though, the. It is pronounced lisping at the end of a word.

F is pronounced as in English.

G is pronounced as in English before a, o, u. It is guttural before e, i, (ğ.) Before n, it has the English pronunciation.
For the syllables gue, gui, see the vowel U.

H is mute, and only lightly aspirated before ue. The letter h has been retained in many words, though not pronounced, and in several it has taken the place of the letter f, formerly used.
th. The Academy suppresses h after t, and instead of ph uses f.

J is guttural before all the vowels, (ğ, čh.)

L is pronounced as in English.
ll. When ll occurs in a word, it is liquid, and pronounced as in the words brilliant, seraglio, William.

M and N are pronounced as in English.
ñ, having this mark, (˜, ñ,) which the Spaniards call n with tilde, (til'de,) has the same sound as n in onion, minion.

P and Q are pronounced as in English.
As to the syllables que, qui, look for the vowel U.

N. B. — Q is changed into c in all words where it is followed by ua, uo, ue, ui, (the u in the latter two preserving its natural sound.)

R, in the beginning and middle of words, is pronounced a little stronger than in English; but double r is much stronger than the English rr.

S is always pronounced hard, like double s, even between two vowels.

T is always hard.

V. The Spaniards often confound the sound of this letter with that of b; but the Academy disapproves of it, and recommends that it should be pronounced as in English.

X is pronounced as s when followed by a consonant; and it is lightly sounded s when followed by ce, ci. It is pronounced like ks between two vowels. In a few words ending in x, it is guttural.

N. B. — X was formerly used as a guttural, (unless the following vowel had the circumflex accent;) but j is now used instead before a, o, u, and g before e and i.

Z is only used now before a, o, u, and is pronounced like the c before e and i. It is always pronounced lisping after a vowel.

The pronunciation of Spanish by the Mexicans is different from that by the Spaniards: —
(1.) They pronounce the liquid ll like the modern French pronunciation long ee.
(2.) They pronounce b and v interchangeably.
(3.) They substitute, in general, the s sound for the th sound.

PORTUGUESE.

1. Vowels.

The vowels are the same as in the Spanish language.
Ao, the o having a deep sound, nearly oo, is somewhat like oung.

2. Consonants.

The consonants, with the following exceptions, are like the English: —
C. ç is like the same French letter.
ch is like English sh.
G is like the French g.
H is always silent, and serves only, when immediately preceded by l or n, to make these letters liquid.
J is like the corresponding French letter.
M and N are like the same English letters, but have sometimes a nasal sound.
Q is like the French, being always accompanied by a silent u.
R is like the Spanish, rolling.
X is like English sh.

GERMAN.

1. Vowels.

A has two sounds: —
(1.) long, (ā,) as in the English word half.
(2.) short, (ă,) which has no corresponding sound in English.
ae, or ä. (1.) long, as the sound between name and care; (2.) short, nearly like e in the word rent.
ai and ay sound broader than the English i in kite.
au approaches the sound of the English ou in our, loud.
aeu or äu has nearly the same sound as the English oi.

E has three sounds: —
(1.) long; 1st, the close or acute sound (ę), the French e fermé. 2d, the open sound, (ę́,) the e ouvert of the French.
(2.) short, (ę́,) nearly like e in the word help.
(3.) obscure in all unaccented syllables, like a in the English word sofa, except before liquids, where it sounds like e in the last syllable of the word heaven.
ei, or ey, are like i in fine, kind.
eu is similar to oi, oy, in boil, toil, joint.

I has two sounds: —
(1.) long, as in mete, (ī.)
(2.) short, nearly as i in pin, fig, (i̇.)
ie is like long i, (ī.)

O is, (1.) long, as in bone, (ō;) (2.) short, (o̧,) as in got.
oe, ö. (1.) long, French eû; (2.) short, French eŭ.
oi, oy, are like the English oi, oy.

U has two sounds: —
(1.) long, (o͞o,) as in to, do, move, prove.
(2.) short, (o͝o,) resembling u in bull, full, bushel.
ue, ü. (1.) long French û; (2.) short French ŭ.

N. B. — Aa, oo, ee, are pronounced as a single long a, o, e.

2. Consonants.

B is like the English b. But when it ends a syllable, or stands next to the final consonant or consonants, not being liquids, or the consonant b, it approximates to the sound of p.

C before a, o, u, au, and before a consonant, is pronounced like k. Before the other vowels, with a few exceptions, it is like ts.

D is like the English d. But at the end of a syllable, it approximates to the sound of t.

F is like English f.

G, in the beginning of a syllable, is always like g in the English word go. After a, o, u, e, i, ä, ö, ü, l, r, it has a peculiar lingual sound, somewhat softer than the guttural ch. (See Ch.)
When preceded by n, g (except in derivative and compound words) has the sound of a gentle k.

H, in the beginning of a word or syllable, is aspirated, as in the English words have, hold. Between two vowels, the aspiration is less strong, and sometimes hardly perceptible. At any other place than in the beginning of a word or a syllable, h is mute, and indicates then the length of the preceding vowel.
th is pronounced as a single t.

J is pronounced as y, and always followed by a vowel.
K is like English k.
L, M, N, and P, are like the corresponding English letters.
Q is always joined with u. It has the sound kw, but is uttered shorter than in English.
R is sounded stronger than in English.
S is always like z, except before a consonant and at the end of a word or syllable, where it is pronounced sharp. It is also pronounced like z between two vowels and after a liquid.
T is like English t. Before i and a following vowel, t is pronounced like ts. But when s precedes t, t keeps its proper sound.
V is always like f.
W is like v. The w in final ow is always silent.
X is like ks.
Z is like ts.

3. Compound Consonants.

Ch is always guttural when preceded by a vowel, or a vowel and a liquid. Ch, in the beginning of a word, followed by a, o, u, or a consonant, is like k.
Chs, in primitive words, is like ks.
Sch, in primitive words, is like sh.
Gn and Kn. Both the g and k are hard.
Ph is like f.
Sz is like hissing s.
Tz doubles the sound of z.

Spelling. — When two vowels are divided by a single or compound consonant, that consonant is spelled and articulated with the second vowel; by more than one consonant, all but the last single or compound consonant belong to the first vowel.

DUTCH.

1. Vowels.

A has two sounds, like the German a. aa, ae, } are pronounced like long a.
E has the three sounds of the German e.
ee is like long open e.
I has the two German i sounds.
ie is like the German ie.
O has the two German o sounds.
oo is long o.
oe is pronounced as oo.
U has the two French u sounds.
ui resembles the English oi in boy.
Y, or sometimes spelt ij, is equivalent to the German ei, ey, or the English long i sound.

2. Consonants.

The consonants are the same as the German, except the following ones: —
G is always strong guttural, unless spelt gh, which is like g in the English word go, or at the end of a word preceded by n.
Sch is not pronounced as sh, but as sk.

SWEDISH.

There are nine vowels, a, e, i, o, u, y, å, ä, (æ,) ö, (œ;) and it is to be remarked, that they are never found compound.

1. Vowels.

A is like the German a.
å is long o, (ō.)
ä (æ) is like the German ä, (æ.)
E has two different pronunciations: —
(1.) long, (the close and acute sound of the German e, — ę,) in the beginning of words, where e makes a syllable by itself, and at the end of a syllable or a word, as also in all syllables that have the tonic accent, and in all words terminating in het.
(2.) like æ, or German e short, when it precedes the consonants f, l, m, n, r, s.
I is like the German i.
O. (1.) O is like a deep o̧o̧, in the beginning of words, when it is a syllable by itself, and at the end of a syllable or a word.
(2.) It is like a long o, when it is immediately followed by one of the consonants f, l, m, n, r, s, t, and before double consonants.
ö (ō) is like the corresponding German letter.
U has almost always a sound like that of i–o̧o̧ combined.
Y is like the French u

2. Consonants.

The consonants are the same as the English, with the following modifications: —
G, before a, o, u, å, is always hard, as in the English word go, and also before e, when it is pronounced like ae.
Before i, y, æ, œ, and before the close and acute e, it is like the English y; but the g retains its hard sound when the acute e terminates the syllable. See J.
gjo, gju, has, in common pronunciation, the sound of yo, yo̧o̧.
H is always aspirated, except before v and j, where it is silent, and in ch, which is pronounced like k.
J is like the English y. In all those words where j is changed into g, that g has a very slight guttural sound.
K is hard before a, o, u, å, and e, (having the sound of æ,) and before e acute, terminating the syllable or word.
k, before the vowels i, y, æ, œ, and e acute, is pronounced as if there were Swedish j between k and the vowel.
In common pronunciation, k before the mentioned vowels, and kj before a, o, u, å, sound like English ch.
L, beginning a word, and followed by y, is almost silent, the y alone being pronounced, with a slight liquid sound before it.
S is like English s. When followed by k, it is like sk English, in all those cases where k has its hard sound; but like sh (or French ch, or German sch) when k is followed by i, y, æ, œ, and e acute, or when followed by j and any of the hard vowels.
T is always hard.
tj, followed by a vowel, has, in common language, a sound like English ch, but much softer; stj, followed by a vowel, like sh.

DANISH.

1. Vowels.

The Danish language has eight vowels: — a, e, i, o, u, y, ä, (æ,) ø, (œ.) There is but one combined vowel that changes pronunciation. The doubling of the other vowels, which hardly takes place except with e, i, u, indicates only the length of the syllable.
The diphthongs are ai, ei, oi, øi, (œi,) au, eu, ou, ui. These make two distinct sounds, pronounced by a single emission of the voice.
A has the two sounds of German a, (ä.)
aa is pronounced long o, (ō;) ae (ä) is like the corresponding German ae.
ai is similar to the German ai, (ī;) au is like the German au.
E has the three German sounds: —
e is mute after a vowel, which it then lengthens;
(1.) at the end of substantives terminating in i, when they derive from the Latin ia;
(2.) at the end of the infinitive of verbs after a vowel, (e being the proper termination of the infinitive of all verbs;)
(3.) at the end of adjectives that terminate in a vowel, under the inflection;
(4.) in the middle of some words, after a long vowel, to distinguish two words, which without the e would have the same orthography, though the vowels have a different length in pronunciation.
ee. The vowels e, i, u, are doubled in the middle of mono syllables, to indicate the e, i, u, long, except before the consonants b, d, g, v, p.
ei is like the German ei.
eu is like the German eu.
I is like the German i.
ii. See ee.
O is like the German o.
oi, øi, or œi, resemble the English oi.
œ (ø) is like the German œ.
ou is like the English ou.

U is like the German u.
ui resembles u French.
Y is like French u.

2. Consonants.

The consonants are like the English, with the following exceptions: —

D is not sounded after a consonant; and this omission is observed even when, by addition, the d passes into the following syllable.
After a vowel, d is pronounced like th.
G is pronounced slightly guttural after a vowel, and when it terminates the syllable.
Preceded by n, it gives a certain nasal sound to the n, without the g being distinctly pronounced.
H is always aspirate, and only mute before v and j.
J is like the English y.
R is like the German r.
V is sometimes found after a, in which cases it takes the place of the vowel u, and combines with the preceding vowel.
W is actually no Danish consonant, but borrowed from the German language, and is only employed in words borrowed from this language. It has the sound of v.

NORWEGIAN.

The written language being the same as the Danish, the Norwegian pronunciation differs chiefly from the Danish in the following instances: —

D is always like the English d.
G is always hard.
O is like the same Swedish vowel.

HUNGARIAN.

1. Vowels.

A accented (á) has always the long a sound in father, (á;) unaccented, has the French short o sound.
E accented (é) resembles the e indicated in the following list by ę; unaccented, it has the German short sound in help.
I has the two German i sounds.
O accented (ó) has a long and deep o sound, (ō;) unaccented, has the two sounds of morn, lot.
ø (ö) has the two sounds of the corresponding German letter.
U accented (ú) has the deep and full sound of the Swedish letter o; unaccented, like English oo.
ue, or ü, has the two sounds of the German, ue, (ü.)
Y, when a vowel, has the sound of the Hungarian i.

2. Consonants.

The consonants are like the English, with the following exceptions: —

C is always joined with some other consonant.
cs is like ch.
cz is like ts.
D is like English d. Followed by j or y, is like d and a gentle aspiration, nearly like the Italian gg followed by a vowel.
G is always hard, like g in the English word go.
gh is like a simple g.
g, followed by j or y, is like dj, dy.
H is always aspirate.
J is like English e, unless preceded by d, g, t. (See these letters.)
R is like the German r.
S is like English sh.
sz is like ss.
T and th are always hard.
ts is like the English ch.
tz is like ts.
tj and ty is like t followed by a gentle aspiration, nearly like the Italian cc followed by a vowel, though the pronunciation does not sound as sharp.
Zs is like the French j.
Y is almost always a consonant. (See dy, gy, ty.) Immediately preceded by l and n, it serves to make these letters liquid, corresponding to the Spanish ll, ñ, as in brilliant, onion.

POLISH.

1. Vowels.

A has the two sounds of the German a.
E accented (é) has the German long æ sound; unaccented, the German short e sound.
I corresponds to the German i.
O accented is like English oo; unaccented, like long o, (ŏ.)
U is like the German u.
Y is like the German short i

2. Consonants.

B is always hard.
C is like the German c.
ch like the German ch.
cz like the English ch.
D, F, and G, are always hard.
H is always aspirate.
J is like the German j.
K, L, M, N, P, like the corresponding English letters; but n accented (n') is like the Spanish ñ.
R is like the German r.
S is always sharp. S accented (s') has a sound of s mixed with German j.
sc, both accented, (s'c',) resembles sts.
sz is like English sh.
T is always hard.
W is like the German w.
Z is like English z. Z, with a point over it, (ż,) is like French j; and z with an accent, (z',) which has no exact equivalent in English, resembles somewhat the ż.

WELSH.

The consonants are divided into mutes and semivowels, and again into labials, dentals, and palatals.

The vowels are of two kinds — the immutable and the mutable.

The mutable vowels are, a, e, o, w; the vowels that suffer no change, i, u, y.

The consonants, under the class of mutes, are b, p, c, g, d, t.

The semivowels are vocal and aspirated.

Vocal semivowels, z, x, l, m, n, r; and the aspirates, ç, ng, ngh, f, h, th.

L, m, n, r, are also distinguished by the name of liquids.

The consonants may be thus classed: —

Labials.	Dentals.	Palatals.
b, v, f, m, p, mh.	d, z, n, t, th, nh, s.	c, ç, ngh, g, ng, h, ll, l, r

There are various combinations of the vowels in the Welsh, forming diphthongs, triphthongs, and others, to the extent, in some cases, of six coming together.

All the vowels preserve their own primitive sounds under every circumstance of combination, without any deviation. So, therefore, whatever number come together, the sounds to be expressed are those of all such combined vowels, but rapidly passed over. There are instances of six vowels coming together, requiring so many quick inflections of the voice to express them.

The following is a list of the common combinations of the vowels: —

aa	ea	ey	iy	ow	uy	wy
ae	ei	ıa	oa	ua	wa	ya
ai	eo	ie	oe	ue	we	ye aw	eu	io	oi	uo	wi	yo
ay	ew	iw	ou	uw	wo	yw

aea	aia	aua	awa	awy	eia	euo	ewy	iau	ieu	wae	wei
aeo	aie	aue	awe	eai	eio	ewa	iae	iaw	oea	wai	wiw
aew	aio	auo	awo	eaw	eua	ewi	iai	iei	oia	waw	wyw

1. Vowels.

A, (1.) short or open a, in man, bar, as, glass.
(2.) long, or â, is the same sound extended, as in care, dare.
E, (1.) short, as in men, bed, fervent.
(2.) long, or ê, as the French é, as in même.
I, (1.) long, as in street, keep (2.) short, as in king, sing.
O, (1.) long, or ô, as in the words note, bone, gone.
(2.) short, as in go, no, got, not, lot, from.
U has the sound of English u in busy, and of i as in sin, thin, live.
W, (1.) is sounded as oo in good, hood; and as u in the word full.
(2.) long, or ŵ, has the sound of oo in mood, rood.
Y, (1.) has the sound of u, as in the words run, turn, and of i as in first.
(2.) long, or ŷ, is sounded like the English y in Sunday, and is like the Welsh u, or less open than the y short.

2. Consonants.

The names of the consonants were anciently formed by sounding the vowel i after all of them; but in the present popular mode, the following are exceptions to that rule, and they begin their sounds with e, c, ç, z, v, f, g, ng, ngh, h, ll, l, m, n, r, s.

The sounds of the consonants, like the vowels, are preserved invariably in all their combinations. The sounds of the letters must be considered as the perfect standard of the pronunciation of the Welsh language.

The letters b, v, f, m, p, have the same sound as in English.

The mutation of the p, denoted by mh, is a kind of aspirated m, whose power may be found by uniting the sound of m, in the word am, to h, in the word here, by a quick pronunciation of the phrase I am here.

(b.) Dental Sounds.

The d, n, s, are the same as the corresponding English letters.

The z, which is a mutation of d, has the soft or flat sound of th, as in the words thus, neither.

The t has the sound of English t in not, ten, to, but does not take the sound of s in any case.

The th, which is a mutation of t, has always the sharp and hard sound of English th, in the words thank, both, nothing.

The nh, another mutation of t, is a sort of aspirated n, whose power is perceivable in the word inherent.

(c.) Palatal Sounds.

The h, l, n, r, are similar to the same English letters.

The c is always sounded like English k.

The ç, (or ch,) being a mutation of c, is a sound which has no standard in English, but is the same as the ch of the German, or the χ of the Greek.

It is produced by the contact of the tongue and the palate about the eighth of an inch farther back than when k is expressed.

The ngh is another modification of c, the power of which may be made out in the word Nottingham, by suspending the breath on the letter i, instead of the proper division of the word.

The g is always like the English hard g, as in go, give, again, leg, peg.

The ll is a sound peculiar to the Welsh; but the Spanish ll approaches very near to it. The sound is produced by touching the palate with the tongue, about an eighth of an inch farther back than when l is articulated.

The accentuation of all words is known by one general rule; that is, such as consist of several syllables have the accent on the penultima, and upon every second syllable backwards. The same principle is applied to several monosyllables coming together, by accenting every second word to the last but one inclusively.

GAELIC.

The Gaelic language has five vowels and thirteen consonants

1. Vowels.

A is sounded as in the English words hall, halt; but before dh and gh, it has often the sound of the diphthong ao.
E represents two different sounds: —
(1.) that of the Greek ε, or ea in the English word bear
(2.) that of a in care.
I is like ee in English.
O has the different sounds of bone, morn, lot.
U is like oo in moon, fool.
The vowels are divided into broad, a, o, u, and small, e, i.

In a word of two or more syllables, if the former ends with a broad vowel, the next syllable must begin with a broad vowel; if with a small vowel, with a small, though these inserted vowels are never pronounced. But in compound words, this rule may often be properly dispensed with.

All the vowels are either long or short. When long, they are generally accented.

In all the syllables of polysyllables, except the first, the vowels have a short and obscure sound, as in the English words sun, bird, mother; and the broad, and sometimes the small, are used for one another.

There are thirteen diphthongs, which are either proper or improper.

Ao and eu are improper, representing simple sounds; the former of which is only attainable by the ear; the latter is like that of the Greek ε, (epsilon.) All the other diphthongs are proper, the sound of each of the vowels being more or less heard. In æ, ai, ei, oi, io, ia, ua, ui, the last vowel, and in ia, io, iu, the first vowel, is but faintly sounded.

There are five triphthongs, aoi, eoi, iai, iui, uai. They are pronounced like the diphthongs ao, eo, ia, iu, ua, with the addition of a short i. They are all long, and never occur but in monosyllables, or the first syllable of polysyllables.

2. Consonants.

The consonants are, b, c, d, f, g, h, l, m, n, p, r, s, t.

Consonants are mutable or immutable.

Mutable are such as, by having an h subjoined to them, either alter or lose their usual sound, viz., b, c, d, f, g, m, p, s, t.

Immutable are such as are never aspirated, or have an h subjoined to them, viz., the liquids l, n, r.

After a short vowel or diphthong, the consonants are generally pronounced as when written double in English.

A consonant standing alone is sounded as if it were the initial letter of the following word, if it begins with a vowel, or as the final letter of the preceding word, if it ends with a vowel.

Bh and mh have the sound of v in English. Mh, in the middle or end of polysyllables, is either silent or stands for a gentle aspiration.
C is always sounded as English k. Ch has the sound of the Greek χ, or of gh in lough, as the Irish pronounce it.
Dh and gh, in the beginning of words, are commonly sounded like the English consonant y. In the middle or end of words, they are often silent, or have the sound of a [faint aspiration.
Fh is silent.
G is always sounded as in the English words get, good.
Ph has the sound of English f.
S, before or after a broad vowel in the same syllable, is as in English. But when immediately before or after a small vowel, it has the sound of sh. S, in the beginning of words, when preceded by the article with t intervening, is silent.
Sh and th, in the beginning of words, have the sound of h alone
Th, after a long vowel, diphthong, or triphthong, is nearly silent; but after a short vowel or diphthong, it has the force of a rapid aspiration.

The immutable consonants l, n, r, when initials of words, not connected with others in a sentence, have a soft double sound, to be learned only by the ear. But whenever the order of construction requires that the mutable consonants should be aspirated, the immutable lose their double sound, and are pronounced nearly as in English.

When the consonants l, n, r, have their double sound in the middle or end of words, they are written double.

OBSERVATIONS ON THE TABLE.

In the preparation of the following table, the compiler has aimed at the utmost possible simplicity. For this reason, he has employed in his key as small a number of English sounds as was possible, and has preferred to refer most of the sounds in the several languages to their nearest English equivalents, rather than to introduce a separate notation and key for each language To do the last, would have been to destroy the simplicity, and, in a great measure, to defeat the object, of the table, which was designed for easy reference, by all classes of readers. It will be sufficient, once for all, to observe, that certain sounds in several of the languages of Europe can be but imperfectly represented by the English letters and syllables which are given as their equivalents. The Swedish u is represented by the English oo or the French u. The Danish g final, not preceded by n, corresponds nearly to the English h guttural. The Dutch ui, uy, is represented by the English oi. In the German, a is indicated by the English a in far; g and ch are marked as gutturals; ö, æ, and ü, ue, correspond to the French eu and u; ai is indicated by i long; eu by the English oi. The Polish z has no corresponding English sound. The Spanish g soft and j differ from the German ch guttural in being pronounced also from the palate. In the French, u has no corresponding English sound; eu is nearly like the u in the English spur; m and n nasal are indicated by ng, but the sound of g should not be heard in the pronunciation; l mouillé final is indicated by ly, gne final by ny; in both these cases, the sound of y consonant being added to that of the l and n, as in brilliant and mignonette; oi is also expressed by wa, a being sounded as in far, except oin, in which a is sounded as in bat. In all names not English, ch at the end of syllables not guttural is tch.

PROPER NAMES OF DISTINGUISHED INDIVIDUALS

OF MODERN TIMES.

The subjoined table was prepared at the suggestion of the publishers, with the design of supplying an important deficiency in the common Biographical Dictionaries and other books of reference. In selecting the names, it was, in the first place, the aim of the compilers to furnish as complete a list as possible of all persons in the pronunciation of whose names the English reader would be likely to feel any interest, and thus to make it, as its title imports, a pronouncing vocabulary. It was also their design to provide, so far as possible, a compendious biographical dictionary. They therefore added the names of distinguished Englishmen and Americans, not so much to indicate their proper pronunciation, as to make the list complete. To the names of all persons, the country of their residence, and their profession or occupation have been attached, that the list might serve the ends of a convenient manual of reference on these points, as well as in respect to pronunciation.

The figured key explains the characters indicating the principal sounds; these are substantially the same with those represented in the Geographical Tables. The abbreviations indicating the countries and employments of the persons are explained in the page preceding the Table, and will be easily understood by the reader. It is believed that this list will be received with favor, and will be regarded by the public as a valuable addition to the Dictionary.

ABBREVIATIONS EMPLOYED IN THE TABLE.

☞ For general principles guiding in the pronunciation of names in the following Table, see "Brief Rules for the Pronunciation of the Principal European Languages," in the Dictionary, pp. 1322—1328.

QUOTATIONS,

WORDS AND PHRASES, PROVERBS AND COLLOQUIAL EXPRESSIONS,

FROM THE

LATIN, FRENCH, ITALIAN, AND SPANISH,

FREQUENTLY OCCURRING IN ENGLISH BOOKS, IN PERIODICALS, AND IN CONVERSATION, RENDERED INTO ENGLISH.

SELECTED AND ARRANGED BY

WILLIAM G. WEBSTER.

[The collection of the materials for the following Tables, was commenced by Mr. WEBSTER many years since, and a large number of the translations are his own. Not a few of these have found their way into other works, evidencing thus their convenience. The remark of Roget in regard to a similar collection, applies as well to this:—"The words and phrases in the following collection are such as are current in modern literature. The words are not always classical, and the sense in which they are used is often peculiar, differing sometimes materially from the standard of the languages from which they are taken. The definitions are necessarily brief, and therefore could not always be literal." THE PUBLISHERS.]

2. Of the Relations of Quantities.

\+ plus or and, denoting addition; as, 2+6 equals 8.

— minus or less, denoting subtraction; as, 6—2 equals 4.

= equal, showing that the quantities between which it is placed are equal; as, 2+6=10—2.

× into or times, denoting multiplication; as, 2×6=2 times 6=12.

÷ divided by, as, 10÷2=10 divided by 2=5.

∼ difference between two quantities without designating which is the greater; as, $a \sim b$.

< is less than; as, $a<b$ signifies that a is less than b.

> is greater than; as, $a>b$ signifies that a is greater than b.

: is to } denoting proportion; as, 2 : 6 :: 5 : 15,
:: as } i.e., 2 is to 6 as 5 is to 15.

√ square root or radical sign; thus, $\sqrt{x}$ denotes the square root of x.

$\sqrt[3]{}$ cube root; and, generally, any root may be denoted by the radical sign with the index of the root placed over it; as, $\sqrt[5]{x}$=fifth root of x.

A small figure (called the index or exponent) placed above and to the right of a quantity, denotes its power; as, 8^2, 8^3, &c., the square, cube, &c., of 8.

——— vinculum
[ ] { } brackets
( ) parenthesis
| bar
} indicate that the quantities inclosed by them are to be taken together.

∴ therefore, or consequently.

∵ because.

Σ sum, denoting the algebraic sum of several quantities of the same nature.

f, F, ϕ function; as, $y=F(x)$, denoting that y is a function of x, or is dependent for its value on x.

$\int$ denotes an integration to be performed.

△ triangle; as △ABC=△ADC.

∠ angle.

⊥ perpendicular.

PECULIAR USE

OF

WORDS AND TERMS IN THE BIBLE.

[THE COMMON ENGLISH TRANSLATION OR KING JAMES' VERSION.]

[The following is taken by permission from Prof. BUSH'S Notes on Genesis, to the author and publishers of which, (Messrs. IVISON & PHINNEY, New York), we would express our obligations for this courtesy. Bush's Notes on Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, and Numbers, constitute an aid hardly less than indispensable to the student of the Bible.—Publishers.]

The following list of obsolete or antiquated terms, it is proper to advise the reader, is taken from the earlier copies of King James' Version, and contains a considerable number which have been since altered, but by whom, or upon what authority, does not appear. Recurrence to the passages indicated will show, however, that several of them do not now stand in our current editions, but have given place to their more modern equivalents ranged in the parallel column. In some cases, moreover, it is not the word, but the sense, which has become antiquated.

Learned Terms.—In the following list of learned terms retained in the common version, it is readily admitted that several may be specified which through long use have become both familiar and intelligible, and that in regard to others it would be difficult to express their meaning well, without a tedious or clumsy circumlocution. But a simple diction is more accordant with the general style of the version, which is remarkable for its use of pure English words in preference to those of Roman origin. Thus the translators almost invariably adopt keep back for suppress; call upon for invoke; bow down for incline; lift up for exalt; stretch out for extend; put out for extinguish; cry out for exclaim; put away for divorce; put asunder for separate; cut off for reject; let go for dismiss, &c. We cite the following instances therefore, rather as exceptions to the general practice of the translators.

Tetrarch	Roman Governor.
Synagogue	assembly.
Proselyte	convert.
Centurion	Roman officer.
Quarternion	party of four soldiers.
Legion	body of Roman soldiers.
Easter	passover.
Scribe	writer.
Infidel	unbeliever.
Matrix	womb.
Occurrent	incident.
Vocation	calling.
Consolation	comfort.
Remission	forgiveness.
Omnipotent	almighty.
Illuminated	enlightened.
Delectable	delightful.
Immutable	unchangeable.
Celestial	heavenly.
Terrestrial	earthly.
Partition	division.
Divination	foretelling.
Diversity	variety.
Importunity	earnest entreaty.
Inquisition	inquiry.
Prognosticator	foreteller.
Ambassage	embassy.
Cogitation	thought.
Exaction	demand, tribute.
Barbed	bearded.
Inordinate	irregular.
Laud	praise.
Adjure	put on oath.
Implead	go to law.
Disannul	make void.
Predestinate	decree beforehand.
Consort	partner.
Amerce	fine.
Incensed	enraged.
Mollified	softened.
Exorcist	one who drives out evil spirits.

Want of uniformity in Proper Names.—Our translators have, in many instances, rendered from the Greek, Hebrew names with Greek terminations; and those names, thus Græcized, they have given in our translation without, if we may so say, Hebraizing them again; insomuch that it is not to be doubted, that many unlearned readers are ignorant that some of the persons spoken of by one name in the New Testament, are the same with those spoken of by another in the Old Testament. The following are examples.

Agar	Hagar, Gal. 4. 24, 25.	Jeremias	Jeremiah, Mat. 16. 14.	Osee	Hosea, Rom. 9. 26.
Azotus	Ashdod, Acts, 8. 40.	Jesus	Joshua, Acts, 7. 45. Heb. 4. 8.	Phaleg	Peleg, Luke, 3. 35.
Charran	Haran, Acts, 7. 2, 4.	Jonas	Jonah, Mat. 12. 39.	Roboam	Rehoboam, Mat. 1. 7.
Cis	Kish, Acts, 13. 21.	Joram	Jehoram, Mat. 1. 8.	Sem	Shem, Luke, 3. 36.
Elias	Elijah, Mat. 11. 14.	Josaphat	Jehosaphat, Mat. 1. 8.	Tyrus	Tyre, Jer. 25. 22.
Eliseus	Elisha, Luke, 4. 27.	Judas	Judah, Mat. 13. 55.	Urias	Uriah, Mat. 1. 6.
Esaias	Isaiah, Rom. 9. 27.	Messias	Messiah, John, 1. 41.—4. 25.	Zacharias	Zechariah, Mat. 23. 55.
Jeremy	Jeremiah, Mat. 2. 17.	Noe	Noah, Mat. 24. 37.

Where a word ends in iah, it is peculiarly wrong thus to transform it, because in nearly every case those names have a reference to Jah or Jehovah, and are compounded with it, as are those that end in el with Elohim, God.—Upon the same principles of simplicity, uniformity, and information, the words Thomas Didymus, Lucas, Marcus, and Timotheus, would be more intelligible to a common English reader, and tend more to the identifying of the persons spoken of, if they were translated Thomas the Twin, Mark, Luke, and Timothy.

VARIOUS PECULIARITIES.

For the sake of the English reader it may be well to group together, in tabular form, a few supplementary items tending to illustrate several points which are less obvious in a version, but which are still important to the intelligent study of the Scriptures.

Hebraisms.—The Hebrew language is distinguished for the use of certain nouns which in connection with other words, form an idiomatical expression and acquire a sense that could not be collected from the known meaning of the separate terms. Of these the most remarkable are בעל Baal, בן son, and איש man, which in their various connections express the relations of possession, dominion, addictedness, &c., in a manner which will best be gathered from the following examples.

Com. Version.	Hebrew.
Gen. 37. 19. dreamer	lord of dreams.
(i. e. addicted to dreaming.)
Gen. 49. 23. archers	lord of arrows.

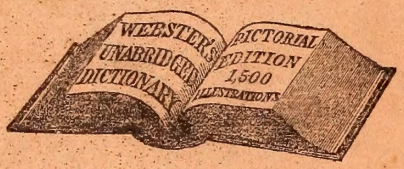
ITALICS.

It has sometimes been objected to our received version that it is encumbered with a load of awkward and useless Italics. Words and phrases printed in this character, it is well known, are introduced for the purpose of making out a complete sense in our language, where the expression in the original is elliptical, or where the idioms of the two languages are so different, that a literal translation would leave the writer's meaning obscure or unintelligible. The first object of the translators undoubtedly was to express in intelligible English what they believed to be the full signification of a sentence; and their next object appears to have been to point out, by the mode of printing, such supplementary words as had been required for the complete development of the sense. In some cases indeed the elliptical form of the original would not be attended with any great uncertainty as to the writer's meaning; and yet as different modes of supplying the ellipses, giving different shades of meaning, may be adopted, it seems desirable even in such cases, that the words actually supplied should be designated. In other cases, the elliptical form is productive of so much obscurity, that scholars will entertain different opinions as to the mode in which the ellipsis should be supplied. Under such circumstances, therefore, it would seem to be obvious that in translating a work of such vast moment to mankind as the Oracles of Truth, whatever is thus added for the fuller explication of the meaning of the original ought to have some mark by which it may be distinguished from the rest. It was with this view that our translators had recourse to the expedient of Italics.

WEBSTER'S UNABRIDGED DICTIONARY,

NEW PICTORIAL EDITION.



In purchasing a full and complete English Dictionary—a work to be used through life—it is important to "GET THE BEST." That Webster's Unabridged is such, appears, from

1. Its Definitions. In this, the leading object of a Dictionary, Dr. Webster stands confessed pre-eminent, compared with past or current English Lexicographers.

"Webster's is the BEST DEFINING Dictionary in the English language."
Horace Mann.

"THE ACCURACY AND EXTENT OF ITS DEFINITIONS."—WM. H. PRESCOTT, the Historian.

"In its Definitions—the object for which nine-tenths of our references to such a work are made—it stands without a rival in the annals of English lexicography."
London Dictionary.

"Webster's definitions are distinguished by clearness, terseness and completeness."—Dr. Ogilvie, Editor Imperial Dictionary.

2. Especially its Scientific definitions. In the additions to the present Pictorial Edition, as well as the former ones, Prof. DANA, of Yale College—who takes high rank among American scholars—and other distinguished scientific men, have given their special attention to this department

"I have been in the habit of using Dr. Webster's Dictionary, for several years past, in preference to all others, because it far excels them all, so far as I know, in giving and defining scientific terms."—President Hitchcock.

"Another important feature of Webster is the introduction of the terms of science and art—distinguished in this from Todd's Johnson, in which thousands of such words are either not inserted, or are explained imperfectly."—Lond. Imp.

3. Its Etymology.—"The Etymological part surpasses anything that has been done for the English Language by any earlier laborers."—George Bancroft.

"Has entered more deeply into Etymological researches, and with greater success, than any of his predecessors. Indeed, he stands, on this ground, not only unrivaled but alone."—North American Review.

"On the great head of Etymology, I know nothing to supply its place."
Daniel Webster.

4. Its Pronunciation.—Avoiding the extreme peculiarities of Walker, which have never found favor with the truly refined and educated, either in this country or Great Britain, and not attempting too much, by striving to indicate to the eye that which can only be learned through the ear,—

Prof. Goodrich says, "After a diligent study of the subject for the last thirty years, after visiting England with a view to satisfy my own mind by inquiries on the spot, after a correspondence with distinguished English scholars continued down to the present time, I feel authorized to say, that the Revised Edition of Dr. Webster's Dictionary does exhibit the actual pronunciation of our language in England, as accurately and completely as any single Dictionary which has ever been published."

The London Imperial, the leading English Dictionary, follows Webster's system of notation entire. SMART, the most distinguished of living English Orthoepists, approves entirely of Prof. Goodrich's recent labors in this department, and communicated his views to the latter freely during their progress, while Prof. RUSSELL, the American elocutionist, declares the "critical judgment and refined taste of Prof. Goodrich have left little to be desired on this point."

5. Its Orthography.—The American public has with sufficient distinctness passed its verdict of approval upon Webster's system of orthography. Founded in reason, favoring the irresistible tendency of the language to simplicity, convenience and system, over TEN MILLIONS of School Books, THIRTY MILLIONS of Periodical issues, and innumerable volumes of miscellaneous works are published annually, following Webster as their general guide.

6. Its Vocabulary.—Nearly ten thousand new words are added to the present edition, collected with assiduous care by numerous laborers in this country and Great Britain, since the issue of the former edition. It thus presents, it is confidently believed, a more complete vocabulary of the words of the living, current English Language, as now written, spoken and read, than can anywhere else be found. In the words now added, take, as example, the following from a single page—Baby-jumper, Bucksheesh, Baggage-car, Bag-man, Bajocco, Balance-sheet, Ball-valve, Balzarine, Bandala, Bandoline, Banjo, Barege, Barmacine, Barology, Barracoon, Baston, Basque, Bat's-wing, (a form of gas-burner,) &c. Many thousand words collected have been rejected, and to encumber the volume with useless compounds, self explaining derivatives, or words entirely obsolete, and appropriate only in a glossary to works of remote origin, as Chaucer, &c., would be, either to enlarge the volume so as to preclude its popular use, or to cut short for this purpose the space better devoted to full and clear definitions.

7. Synonyms.—This feature occupies about 70 Quarto pages, and has over 2000 words; those of like meaning grouped together, are thus discriminated in their exact shades of likeness and difference, so as greatly to facilitate the precise and accurate use of language. Those conversant with Dr. Goodrich's former labors of this character and examining the present Table, in its fullness and completeness, will be prepared to find this feature of very great value. Not so complete and valuable a work in this department alone, it is believed, can elsewhere be found. We are having ample testimony of this.

8. Pictorial Illustrations.—These, 1,500 in number, are of a size, character and finish, truly to illustrate the words and objects referred to, while more diminutive, or less perfect ones, must, evidently, very much fail of this object. The grouping of those of the same class together, answers a very important purpose. As to the execution of the Illustrations, a distinguished English Publisher states that not more than one Artist in Great Britain equals these in the style of his work; and the Illinois Teacher declares, "We had the curiosity to examine with a magnifier some of these engravings, and compare them with the steel engravings on bank notes, and found the Illustrations (of the Dictionary) often equally good, sometimes superior."

9. Citations.—Illustrative sentences from the best writers are often given, showing the use of the word in its connections.

10. The Tables.—Giving pronunciation of Scriptural Names, Greek and Latin Proper Names, Geographical Names, 8000 Distinguished Persons of Modern Times, Words and Phrases from the Latin, French, Italian and Spanish, Mottoes of the States, Abbreviations explained, Arbitrary Signs, peculiar use of Words and Terms in the Bible, &c., &c.

11. Its Cheapness.—No volume, it is believed, published in this country, beside the Bible, is sold so low in proportion to the quantity of matter it contains, 1750 large quarto pages, in fine, yet distinct type. Especially is this true of any copy-right work, when the vast amount of labor expended upon Webster's Dictionary is considered. In addition to Dr. Webster's own life-long toil, nearer twenty than ten years of earnest literary labor have since been devoted to its perfection.

12. Its general recognition, as a guide to the meaning, derivation, pronunciation and spelling of words, securing an acknowledged authority, and a common standard,—so that we can use language as others use it.

"If we would have uniformity, we must adopt Webster, for he can not be displaced; but others may be."—Prof. Stowe.

LATE EDUCATIONAL TESTIMONY.

Worthy of the proud place it occupies, as the great standard dictionary of our good English language. I say standard, for while a few scholars and others, here and there, prefer other dictionaries, Webster's is beyond dispute the book of the people, the common standard of appeal among the great masses, learned and unlearned, of our land.—Hon. J. M. Gregory, Sup. Pub. Inst., Mich., June, 1859.

"It is a noble work, and does you infinite credit."—Hon. L. C. Draper, State Supt. Wisconsin, August, 1859.

More than ever is the book a necessary article in the school-house, and in the family where learning and literature have a place. * * We had the curiosity to examine with a magnifier some of these engravings, and compared them with steel engravings in bank notes, and found the illustrations often equally good, sometimes superior. None but a teacher, or an intelligent parent, can estimate how valuable these eighty pages of illustrations are. The placing all the illustrations in a separate part of the volume has allowed the printing of them to be executed in much better style than if they had been incorporated in the text.
Illinois Teacher, August, 1859.

In Definitions, Webster is unrivaled. Webster's Etymology is admirable. Nearly all American newspapers and books spell according to Webster. To dethrone Webster from the affections of the American people would be a greater revolution than has been witnessed since the Crusades.—Correspondent Mich. Jour. Education, August, 1859.

The value of the dictionary is materially increased by the additions, and we do not see how it can be improved in any respect. The acknowledged standard in our State; the thanks of the public are due the enterprising publishers for their unremitting exertions in keeping the work fully up to the progress of our language.—Wisconsin Jour. Education, August, 1859.

In our daily teaching we have had upon our table the new edition of Webster, and have subjected it to constant test. * * Each feature is really important. * * Not a word is necessary concerning the matter of Webster's Unabridged Dictionary, it is Webster—Ho Megistos. The Table of Synonyms is of almost inestimable value. A case occurred the other day in our school. * * The Pictorial Illustrations are henceforth a sine qua non for every large dictionary. * * By having them separate like most Encyclopedias, all illustrations of Architecture, Heraldry, Botany, or of Mechanics, can be brought together. * * The best Lexicon of the English Language ever issued from the Press.—R. I. Schoolmaster, July, 1859.

In all respects a book of unsurpassed worth.—Connecticut Common School Journal, August, 1859.

We consider that the additions have more than doubled the value of the work for ordinary use.—Indiana School Journal, August, 1859.

That this will be the most valuable edition of any Dictionary in the English language, no one can for a moment doubt.—Iowa School Journal, July, 1859.

The illustrations are finely cut and printed, and form a novel and valuable feature.—Alabama Educational Journal, August, 1859.

We may safely say, that Webster's Dictionary, Pictorial Edition, Unabridged, is the most complete Dictionary of the English Language that we have ever seen. In the completeness of its vocabulary of our language, and in the accuracy and fullness of its definitions, Webster's Dictionary stands pre-eminent; and in orthography it is followed by a majority of American writers, so far as our observation extends.—North Carolina Jour. of Education, August, 1859.

It has retained all the good of its predecessors, and has added new and valuable improvements. * * * * Hon. Horace Mann has said: "It is the best defining Dictionary in the English Language," and eminent scholars and orators, like Daniel Webster, Wm. H. Prescott, and others, have declared themselves decidedly in favor of the accuracy and extent of its definitions. * In this respect, (pronunciation,) Webster's works appear to us at least as good and authoritative as any we have seen. * These alterations (orthography) appear to us not only reasonable, but also popular, when we are told that ten million school-books are annually published in the United States, compiled by authors who recognize Webster as their standard of orthography. * * Too high praise can not be bestowed on the execution of the wood cuts. To present these cuts all by themselves is an advantage, because they could thus be printed on better paper, and be easier and to greater advantage classified under distinct heads. * * A table of Synonyms, by Prof. Goodrich, occupying seventy quarto pages, and containing over 2,000 words, the meaning and use of which are shown more clearly and minutely than in any other work with which we are acquainted. * * * No unimportant and arbitrary compounds have been admitted in the appendix of this edition. * * * * * * That a volume like this, of 1750 quarto pages, handsomely got up, profusely illustrated, alike substantial and attractive, and embodying an amount of literary labor found in few other works, can be purchased as low as this is, is one of the marvels of modern skill and enterprise.—Massachusetts Teach., Sept., 1859.

LETTER FROM DR. DICK. — Perhaps no foreign writer has been more generally read, on this side the Atlantic, for the last twenty years, than Dr. Thomas Dick. About twenty years ago, E. & G. Merriam published, at Brookfield, several editions of Dick's "Christian Philosopher," "Philosophy of Religion," and "Philosophy of a Future State." Some six or eight valuable works have since issued from Dr. Dick's pen, which have been republished here, and have had an extensive and constant sale. One house in Philadelphia publish ten different works of this author, and it may well be questioned whether any modern writer in the language, on the other side the water, has circulated in this country so large a number of volumes.

From such a man it is gratifying to receive a testimonial to American art and learning. The following letter was received by Messrs. G. & C. Merriam, of this town, in acknowledgment of the receipt of a copy of "Webster's Dictionary," by Dr. Dick, and does honor alike to the writer, and the gentlemen to whom it is directed. — Springfield Republican.

BROUGHTY FERRY, NEAR DUNDEE, Sept. 12, 1849.

MESSRS. G. & C. MERRIAM. Gentlemen: I received from Mr. Wiley, Aldine Chambers, London, your very valuable and highly acceptable present of "Webster's American Dictionary of the English Language," for which I return you my grateful acknowledgments; and as it will always be in my study for reference, it will constantly remind me of your kindness and liberality.

This Dictionary is, undoubtedly, the most complete Dictionary of the English language that has ever been published, and AGES WILL ELAPSE before any other dictionary of that language will be required. It is, in every respect, far superior to the folio editions of Johnson's Dictionary. The introductory matter, on the origin and progress of language, etymology, the changes of the English language, and other topics, contains an immense mass of useful information, which must have cost the author a very great degree of labor and research. The pronunciation of Scriptural, Classical, and Geographical names, forms a most valuable appendix to the Dictionary, and cannot be too highly appreciated.

As to the external appearance of the copy which you sent, it could not have been more elegantly and tastefully adorned, although it had been intended to be presented to her majesty, Queen Victoria. Its binding has been much admired by every person who has seen it, and reflects great honor on the taste and ingenuity of the bookbinder.

I trust you will receive a proper remuneration for the risk incurred in publishing such a large and important volume, which contains a quantity of letter press greater than almost any other single volume in my possession. I presume it has an extensive sale.

Wishing you all happiness and prosperity, and with many thanks for your invaluable present, I am, gentlemen,

Your much obliged and humble servant,

Thomas Dick

[LL. D., of Scotland, author of "Christian Philosopher," &c.]

"Etymological part surpasses any thing that has been done for the English Language by any earlier laborers in the same field."

George Bancroft

"Every scholar knows its value."

Wm. H. Prescott

[Author of "Ferdinand and Isabella," "Conquest of Mexico," &c.]

It is acknowledged, both in this country and in America, to be the most copious and most excellent at present in circulation. Dr. Webster spent thirty years on his Dictionary, ten of which were devoted to the etymological department alone, and he has accordingly thrown much additional light on the origin and primary sense of words, and on the affinities between the English and many other languages. — Editor of the London Imperial Dictionary.

THE BEST AND MOST USEFUL DICTIONARY OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE EVER PUBLISHED. — London Times.

"Its reputation is widely extended. I doubt not this edition has received essential improvements from the able hands it has passed through."

Jared Sparks

[LL. D., President of Harvard University.]

"A very valuable work — the book is full of learning — a NECESSITY TO EVERY EDUCATED MAN."

Lord Brougham

"The most useful Dictionary of the language.'

H. Clay.

"So far as I know, there is a unanimity of opinion that Webster's is the BEST DEFINING DICTIONARY in the English language. I assure you it will give me pleasure, as far as I have the opportunity and ability, to recommend to all students, AND ESPECIALLY ALL THOSE WHO ARE MAINLY DEPENDENT ON SELF-CULTURE OR SELF-EDUCATION, TO KEEP A COPY OF THIS WORK BY THEIR SIDE AS A HAND-BOOK."

Horace Mann

"ACCURATE and RELIABLE in giving a just exhibition of the language."

Robt. C. Winthrop

[Late Speaker U. S. House of Representatives, and now U. S. Senator from Massachusetts.]

"The most ACCURATE and RELIABLE Dictionary of the Language."

Theodore Frelinghuysen

[Chancellor N. York University.]

Geo. N. Briggs

[Governor of Massachusetts.]

Dr. Webster has entered more deeply into etymological researches, and with, greater success, than any of his predecessors in the same vocation. * * Indeed, on this ground, he stands not only unrivaled, but alone. — North American Review.

Normal School of the State of New York.

"Resolved, unanimously, That Webster's Quarto Dictionary be the Standard in the New York State Normal School."

WM. H. CAMPBELL, Clerk Ex. Com.

Albany, March 12, 1850.

Academies of the State of New York.

At a meeting of the Regents, held at the Capitol, Albany, Feb. 14, 1850, "Resolved, unanimously, That the new edition of Webster's Dictionary in Quarto, edited by Professor Chauncey A. Goodrich, and published by G. & C. Merriam, Springfield, Mass., be recommended to be purchased for the Libraries of Academies under the visitation of the Regents." [About 150 in number.] A true copy. T. ROMEYN BECK.

We venture to say that there is no Dictionary in the English language which combines so many advantages, with such economy of price, beauty of execution, compactness and clearness, as this Quarto edition of Webster. — New York Observer, December 4, 1847.

We rejoice that the public award is strongly ratifying our long-cherished conviction, that Noah Webster was decidedly the best lexicographer who has treated of the English language. * * Emphatically the Dictionary of our language. — New York Tribune, December 7, 1847.

In its admirable definitions, its accurate philology, its copiousness, good sense, and completeness, it is fast receiving the judgment of the learned world, that it has no equal. — New York Evangelist, December 9, 1847.
